How different from that other trip! A wild cannibal soldier thirsting for the blood of his fellows, and the old feudal enmity burning in his heart. He goes back now a man, washed, dressed, the quiet, humbled soldier of King Jesus, with no weapon save "the sword of the Spirit," and his "feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace." His water bottle slung over one shoulder, a parcel of food on his back, his walking staff in his hand, he strode into the village of Isaka, every inch a man; the first one from Injolo since that awful raid. Long had they thirsted for vengeance, but no chance had given little Isaka such an opportunity as this. They gathered about him, a wild, jibbering crowd, besmirched with their ochres and armed with their spears and deadly poisoned arrows, with sheath knives strapped across their breasts; he, unarmed and unafraid. Bonjolongo! A wondrous transformation!

"Why, you are Bonjolongo, aren't you?" "Sure, I'm Bonjolongo." "Why, you are from Injolo, aren't you?" "Yes, I'm from Injolo." "Ah!" they cried, "we'll kill you." And they meant it all too truly. It was no idle threat. They had not had a chance at "blood-vengeance" for what they had suffered at the hands of Injolo. Here stands this big fellow, unarmed. What a fine pot-roast he would make! So that threat had a sinister meaning in it.

Bonjolongo stood there unwavering. He said: "Do you think me a fool to come here unarmed and alone? Why, I could have brought the whole village of Injolo at my back, and we could have wiped you out of existence." It was true. "No," he said, "I did not come as before, but to tell you of God's love for us all, and this God, whom you call in ignorance 'Nzakomba,' will protect me. Why, you could not hurt me if you wished." This was a stunner, and he followed up his advantage by "preaching Jesus" unto them. They were not to be cheated into losing their man, and the bolder daredevils went off to the far end of the village to hold a council of war and smoked the wild hashesh hemp (cannibis indica) until they became crazy, delirious with hallucinations of their own invulnerability and irresistibility. They came to the place where he was staying and demanded that he be given up, and upon refusal demanded entrance into the hut where he was staying, but his host remained firm in his refusal. All night long with firebrands they kept watch lest he escape. All night long Bonjolongo kept vigil in prayer. Morning dawned and he strode out of the house and faced them with a greeting of "Loewa" (Are you awake?). Involuntarily they responded with a deep simultaneous "O, la we O" ("Yes, and are you?") the friendly greetings. "Listen," he said, "while I give you my parting message, for I am going home." "Eh! you are going home are you?" with a leer and a sneer. "Yes, I am going home." "Well, when you go, which path are you going to take?" they scoffingly asked him. "Oh, I am going to take the right hand path," he answered. "Eh, you are going to take the right hand path, are you?" they snarled at him, for they had made up their minds that he should never get away alive.

No heathen would think of being so simple as to give the truth for an answer to any question. They always lie and expect you to be clever enough to catch them. When you wish to compliment any one out there call him a "liar." Of course Bonjolongo was lying to them. They knew well enough that he would take the left hand path, so they filtered down through the forest behind their huts and ambushed the left hand path; they were going to be as clever as he. Bonjolongo preached to those who stayed, and bade them goodbye and started down the road, accompanied by one who had been delegated to do so. They came to the parting of the ways, and Bonjolongo started down the right hand path with an "Ocikala" ("You are staying?"). The other native called out at the top of his voice, "Nsonsolo inyo lofofomba" ("Indeed, you don't lie.") He was not praising Bonjolongo for being a truth teller but was signaling to the ambuscade that Bonjolongo had gone the right hand path. Bonjolongo knew when to couple up faith with works. He took to his heels and saved his life that time. But he returned again and again to Isaka, preaching the wondrous message of redeeming love. He had the joy of seeing Bompongo, now one of the best of Bolenge's evangelists, Osongomma and others accept that same Lord and Savior he loved.

This is the power of the Gospel and these are the type of children who are carrying the Light of the World to the depths of the farthest villages of "Darkest Africa," and who will make it some day aglow with the

FATHER AND SON

Both Gained Health on Right Food.

A food that will build up the health of a man and that can be digested by a baby, certainly has value worth considering.

The following report from an Ohio wife and mother is to the point and interesting.

"My husband had suffered great agony from stomach trouble at times for five years. Finally, after six months in the hospital, he was operated on for appendicitis.

"From that time he grew weaker and thinner until, when we brought him home, he was reduced from 145 to 108 lbs.

"Then he began to eat for breakfast, Grape-Nuts with cream and a soft boiled egg. For dinner a dish of Grape-Nuts and cream, toasted bread and a glass of warm milk. For supper same as breakfast, with a baked potato, one or two poached eggs, and a glass of warm milk.

"After two months on this diet he had nearly regained his normal weight. He took outdoor exercise, and got plenty of sleep. He has no more trouble with his stomach, and can eat anything.

"These results induced us to try Grape-Nuts on our 6-months baby, who from birth had been puny. Nothing seemed to agree with him, although we tried the whole list of Infant Foods.

"When I began to feed him Grape-Nuts, with warm milk poured on to make it soft, he weighed only 13 lbs. After six weeks of his new diet he has gained 7 lbs., and is healthy and happy."

glory of the Son of God, and for whom we need a training school for their better preparation as the messengers of that Gospel they so heroically proclaim. It is to evangelize these and the millions still living the bloody life of cannibals and the degradation of generations of fetichism and life of abject sin and licentiousness that we are begging you to provide us a steamer that the message may be expedited, and the messengers you send may not have to risk their lives in shallow, dug-out logs in order to proclaim the Word of Life to the farther "regions beyond." Will you do it? You can if you will. God grant you may see the vision of this great opportunity and feel your great responsibility.

"In Faith, Unity: In Opinion, Liberty"

A SYMPOSIUM.

The discussion you propose is very practical. To agree on these points will contribute to peace. I hope we can reach an understanding on these vital questions.

With me, faith is, to believe in the Bible as the word of God, or, God's communication to men. It does not affirm that those Scriptures for which no inspiration is claimed shall be counted in the record. Faith comes by hearing the word of God (Rom. 10:17; Eph. 2:20; 2 Tim. 3: 15:17; John 5:39; 2 Pet. 1:21; John 20:20, 21). These Scriptures give us a central proposition: Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. This truth is compared to a rock on which the church was built (Matt. 16:16-18). This is the sum of faith, and must be believed (John 6:69; 1:1; 3:16).

This is unity of faith (Eph. 4:5). Less than this is not unity of faith, is not faith.

Some give us their "view" that is not only not according to faith, but diametrically opposed to faith, and hide their unbelief behind "my view" or "my opinion." They carry over matters of faith into the realm of opinion, and claim the right to contradict the word of God, under the liberty of opinion. If one believes in the Deity of Christ, he will never hold an opinion averse to a statement of our Lord.

I understand opinion to relate to questions on which the word of God has not affirmed or denied. This was Paul's position as stated in Rom. 14 and 1 Cor. 8. Faith, divine faith, accompanies the word of God from first to last. After that you have conjecture, opinion, reverie and supposition.

Des Moines, Ia. D. R. Dungan.

The difference between faith and opinion has always been well understood, and practically accepted by us. Every preacher has taught it. Any violation of the great principle based on this difference has never received any toleration by us.

But we have always been prompt to repudiate the application of the word opinion to anything that is really a matter of Bible doctrine. And this, by the grace of God, we shall continue to do.

Lexington, Ky. C. L. Loos.

The motto: "In faith unity, in opinion liberty," sounds well, but is of doubtful value. Every one will stretch it to suit himself. What are matters of faith and what belongs to the realm of opinion? Nobody is authorized to say. One thing hangs somewhat upon another. It seems to me that the divinity of Jesus Christ, his resurrection from the dead, the inspiration of the Scriptures and their all-sufficiency for our salvation and guidance in the Christian life, are matters of faith. That God answers prayer because of his Fatherly love and care for us, that there is a life after death and that the righteous shall dwell with him forever are to me matters of faith.

But here comes along a greater scholar and a better man than I am and tells me that these things are not matters of essential faith, at least in the way I hold them, but of opinion, perhaps even of superstition. So there you are. I think the Baptismal Confession is norm by which to test a man as to whether he is a Christian. But the line can not be accurately drawn, in my judgment, between faith and opinion. Let us all try to have as much faith as possible and as few opinions as we can get along with.

Allan B. Philputt.

Indianapolis, Ind.

In reply to your letter asking for a brief answer to the question: "Where shall we draw the line between faith and opinion?" I submit the following statement:

"The present policy of the Christian Standard in calling for the removal of Brother Willett from the Centennial Program with the corresponding threat that it has made, editorially, raises a tremendous issue in our brotherhood, and one, in my humble opinion, that ought never to have been raised at all.

As I understand our position as a religious body, one of the protests we have made is against making theological opinions tests of faith or fellowship, and this is certainly what is being done in this instance. It seems to me that it would be as logical and as just to protest against the appearance of "our grand old man from Lexington" on that program, because he may or may not hold certain theological positions. Brother Willett and Brother McGarvey have both accepted Christ as their personal Saviour, they regard the New Testament as the only necessary rule of faith and practice. They are men of blameless lives. Why should there be any discrimination as between them?

I regard them both as Christlike men and I believe in them both.

Edgar D. Jones.

First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

I confess I do not not like the attitude toward Christianity into which your question, "Where shall we draw the line between faith and opinion," leads me. I have heard men deny the necessity of the vermiform appendix on the ground that one can live on comfortably without it, still I prefer to have mine. One could live on without an eye or an arm, for that matter, still his life would be impaired. Things that are not necessary to lower ends may be absolutely necessary to higher. One may make a fortune without an education, but nevertheless an education is necessary if he is to realize the higher intellectual possibilities of his life. I suppose we are really in need more of both faith and opinion, that it, faith and opinion of the right kind. So it has seemed to me well to try to understand and live the life that is in Christ with the idea that whatever he lived and taught, in so far as it may be made to apply to our lives, is necessary if we are to realize their largest possibilities.

But it is a situation we are dealing with, and many kinds of men are coming to us seeking their way into the kingdom, and it is a difficult question, what shall we require of them with their great diversity of faith and life. The real requirement as God sees it is of course the presence of the divine life in them. We may hope for its acceptance even though it be weak and ignorant. But it is not easy for us to determine its presence. I suppose the best we can do is to deal gently with the promise of spiritual life wherever we find it, seeking to bring those who come to us to live the life that Jesus taught, submitting themselves to all of his requirements, ever keeping themselves humble and open-minded.

Under the old order seekers after God were confused and the church divided over creedal requirements. We have felt that there should be larger liberty in matters of opinion, we have pleaded for a return to the apostolic requirements, such as belong essentially to the life in Christ, in the interests of loyalty and clearness and unity; hence the motto "in faith unity; in opinion liberty." It is a cry of protest against a theologized sectarian Christianity.

You ask me "Where shall we draw the line between faith and opinion?" We should seek to find where Jesus drew it and draw it there. This is an answer, however, that brings us into a large field. For a century we have been in practical agreement and well satisfied with ourselves. We have not been able to see how the limit of faith and requirement can be further reduced than as it appears in our common practice. But as the unifying processes that are at work in our age are bringing us closer to other Christian bodies and the issue of unity is growing more acute, new problems are looming up upon the horizon. May God give us grace and wisdom for their solution when they come. We may well rejoice that they are approaching slowly. Two dangers beset us, one of too great conservatism, the other of too great haste. We shall do well to "wait upon the Lord."

St. Joseph, Mo., C. M. Chilton.

Perhaps there is nothing that distinguishes our religious movement more than the difference we have already made between faith and opinion. This was prominently set forth in the "Declaration and Address" by Thomas Campbell, was afterward earnestly insisted upon by Alexander Campbell, and was finally wrought out in detail and forcibly illustrated by Walter Scott and Dr. Richardson. The last mentioned gave it a prominent place in his little book on "Principles of Our Religious Movement." Practically our movement may be generalized as follows:

In matters of faith, unity; in matters of opinion, liberty; in matters of practice, charity. No one has a right to make a test of fellowship where the Word of God has not made it. Of course, we must insist upon the things that are essential, and we must not underrate the things that are important, but we need not be specially conscientious about things of indifference. Matters of opinion may be important, but they are not essential; but matters of faith are essential. In no case do I believe in making a test of fellowship of anything not essential to the Christian faith, state and character. While erroneous views concerning the Old Testament Scriptures, or even the New, may invalidate the usefulness of a brother for teaching nevertheless these views may not be regarded as fundamental, or even very important, so far as his Christian life is concerned. There were thousands of Christians in the days of the Apostles who never saw or even heard of the Old Testament Scriptures. The New Testament, as we now have it, was not written for several years after churches were established all over Palestine and Asia Minor. It is very important, I think, that we should have right views of both Testaments, but our views need not hinder the development of Christian character, and it is precisely this that must be considered chiefly when we are looking at the conditions of Christian fellowship.

Columbia, Mo. W. T. Moore.

[The statement of Brother Dungan that "opinion relates to questions on which the word of God has not affirmed or denied," and that of Brother Loos, that we "repudiate the application of the word opinion to anything that is really a matter of Bible doctrine," seem to us to require some modification. The word of God has "affirmed" concerning the fact of Christ's death as an atonement for sin, but we may hold an opinion as to how Christ's death saves men, which differs from another brother's opinion, and we may regard our opinion on that "Bible doctrine" as an essential part of the faith. So of the design of baptism, nature of faith, evidence of pardon, etc. Even a true theory on these questions is no part of the faith, since one may be saved without it. What is necessarily involved in our faith in Christ is a part of "the faith." This covers Brother Philputt's statement about answer to prayer and the life beyond. —EDITOR.]

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Everything about the man who lives in the white mansion at the other end of the avenue from my perch is interesting. He is unique among the rulers of earth. Hardly a day passes without its thrill from the executive head of the Republic. A few days ago he gave fifty-seven army men a walk. They followed on a hike through our Rock Creek Park. It was a grueling experience which some of them will long remember. At first the devotees of Mars took it as a joke, or at most a pleasant afternoon with the foremost citizen of the nation. They arrayed themselves, shined their shoes, and started as on a lark. The Park is a rugged region. There are dense thickets and great rocks, precipitous hillsides and deep waters, narrow paths and ledges of stone rising many feet above the wild current of the stream. Pell-mell, higgledy-piggledy, over it all and through it all, "Teddy" led the way, and at one point plunged into the creek and started for the opposite bank. After him came his braves, wet with perspiration, panting for breath, some of them almost in a state of collapse, grabbing at underbrush and weeds to steady themselves and scrambling up the bank half dead from the ice-cold bath and strenuous effort to get out of it alive. Near the same spot, one "walking" with the President last winter, narrowly escaped drowning, and was rescued from the swift current with difficulty; and Sunday found a number of our gallant young Grants and Lees in warm quarters, coddling themselves and giving thanks for their safety from perils by land and water. Such experiences, however, are mere trifles to the man who will soon tackle the Dark Continent. "Bizarre," "outre," "silly"—these are some of the terms applied to "Teddy's" latest.

Two days later he is again before the public in his role as a defender of the faith of his friend Taft. It was entertaining, to say the least, to see the President work that little political stroke before the election, when he went with Mr. Taft on Sunday to the Unitarian Church, and now he brings out his statement to the Dayton man.

"To discriminate against a thoroughly upright citizen because he belongs to some particular church, or because, like Abraham Lincoln, he has not avowed his allegiance to any church, is an outrage against that liberty of conscience which is one of the foundations of American life. If you once enter on such a career there is absolutely no limit at which you can legitimately stop. You say that 'the mass of voters that are not Catholics will not support a man for any office, especially for president of the United States, who is a Roman Catholic.' I believe that when you say this you foully slander your fellow-countrymen. Discrimination against the holder of one faith means retaliatory discrimination against men of other faiths. The inevitable result of entering upon such a practice would be an abandonment of our real freedom of conscience. In my cabinet at the present moment there side by side sit Catholic and Protestant, Christian and Jew, each man chosen because, in my belief, he is peculiarly fit to exercise on behalf of all our people the duties of the office to which I have appointed him. In no case does the man's religious belief in any way influence his discharge of his duties, save as it makes him more eager to act justly and uprightly in his relations to all men."

Most broadminded men will agree with this view. We are a Christian nation, and our Supreme Court has gone so far as to say this; but we are proud of both our civil and religious freedom, and we grant every man his right to private judgment. We may not endorse his religious position, and yet believe in him as a man of integrity, and uprightness, of patriotism and statesmanship. Neither Grant nor Cleveland was a member of any church; John Adams and John Quincy Adams were Unitarians; two of the three immortals, Calhoun and Webster, attended the Unitarian Church here, and Abraham Lincoln and Thomas Jefferson were of very doubtful religious persuasion, yet these men made very fair presidential timber, in the belief of their countrymen. There are Unitarians and Unitarians, as there are Trinitarians and Trinitarians. Even President Roosevelt, while he issues a Thanksgiving proclamation, never attends a Thanksgiving service.

Even the terms of speech our chief magistrate uses seem more striking when he uses them. Here is "frazzle." Frazzle is a good old word which I have been familiar with since my babyhood; but everybody here and beyond the sea is asking what is "frazzle"—this Rooseveltian "frazzle." We know not what he means. "We have beaten them to a frazzle." It is like the literary light at the White House reception who asked: "Mr. President, what is your favorite character in fiction?" "Greatheart, madam, Greatheart." "And where is it found, Mr. President? In some new book that I have not read, no doubt. Tell me where, Mr. President!" So about "frazzle." "Frazle," "frazlings" are good, oldfashioned words. You may spell them with two "izzards" or one. "Tell General Lee I have fought my corps to a frazzle," is Gordon's message to Lee at Appomattox. "My fingers are all scratched to frazzles," writes Kipling; and Joel Chandler Harris used it when he described a woman with "hair of a reddish gray color, and its frazzled and tangled condition suggested that she had passed through a period of extreme excitement." Frazzled, all frayed out, worn threadbare. A colored sister had been long seeking, but failed to come through. At last, in the revival meeting, she cried, "O Lord, you know I ain' nuttin', an' you know de preacher ain' nuttin', an' you know de church done woah to a frazzle. Lord, you must do sumpin'!" A good word is frazzle, though you do not find it in the Standard Dictionary. It is not peculiar to "Teddy," but he makes it interesting to thousands.

Another thing—this African hunt. Amazing, this passion to kill things! Sir Henry Hamilton, a big game Nimrod, has been here lecturing on the President's route in the wilds of the Dark Continent. The license he will take out for our T. R. permits him to slaughter twenty-one kouds, two gemsbok, one bongo, two chevrotains, two colobi and one egret—these in the part of Africa under British control; and now every society bud and small boy is hunting up kouds, gemsbok, bongos, chevrotains, colobi and egrets in the nature books. They all want to know—don't you know! It will never do, when Scribner's and The Outlook are full of this sort of thing, to be taken for a nature-fakir. You want to enjoy the thrill from the wild as you have the thrill from the White House. Then our Nimrod is prohibited from shooting elands, okapis and tragelaphuses. We should not recognize a tragelaphus coming up the street, any more than a frazzle, and so we must get busy and become acquainted with this extraordinary beast. As to quaggas and hyraxes, galagos and klipspringers, tsteses and termites and our illustrious kinsman, cynocephalus hamadryas, have we not met them many a time in the fellowship of our lamented friend Barnum? Great were Vasco da Gama and Mungo Park, Bruce and Clapperton, Barth and Overweg, Speke, Baker, Du Chaillu and Livingstone, but greater will be our President in letting the light on the Dark Continent into the American mind. Mighty was Nimrod, the great hunter before the Lord, but mightier is the huntsman who dwells in sight of the dome beside the Potomac's still waters.

The President is well described by an English visitor, and this story has never found its way into the papers. An Englishman was being entertained here, and the host said: "You have seen our President. What do you think of him?" "What do I think of Mr. Roosevelt? Why, ah, Mr. Roosevelt, ah — Mr. Roosevelt, ah — Mr. Roosevelt strikes me as a combination of St. Vitus and St. Paul!" Very good.

It would be more than human if such a man who is always doing did not sometimes overdo. Here is his treatment, for example, of my friend, Senator Carmack, who has fallen before an assassin's bullet. Carmack was the most brilliant man in the south, gentle and lovable, one of the noblest and bravest of spirits, as I knew him. He was a member of the Christian Church and an attendant at the Vermont avenue services when at the capital. He was in the great battle against rum when he fell by a coward's hand. No doubt he had his faults, but he was a foeman worthy of any man's steel. In the Senate he alluded to the President as like "my friend, Joe Ballanfaut's horse, of which remarkable animal it was said that running away was his gait." The President had spoken in an uncomplimentary way of the senator to some Tennesseans and they had repeated it. After this the President had Carmack left off the official invitation list of the White House. Later, the senator, on the floor of the Senate, in a brilliant speech, defended the President in the Brownsville matter, and he was invited to the White House, but very properly declined, thinking that his enemies might charge that he defended the President to gain presidential favor. Senator Morgan said of Carmack: "He is the most brilliant man whom I have ever met."

One thing about Carmack: His death means the safety of thousands, the utter banishment of the liquor infamy from Tennessee, a new impulse to the work of its abolition in the whole of his beloved south, a blow to the monstrous iniquity in the entire nation. Only the rum fiend could inspire such a crime in Christian America.

Brave spirit! Carmack died for the cause of temperance. "Considered socially, financially, politically or morally, the licensed liquor traffic is, or ought to be, the overwhelming issue in American politics. The destruction of this iniquity stands next on the world's calendar," said William Windom, Garfield's Secretary of the Treasury. Carmack perished for this faith. A Historic Book.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Declaration and Address of Thomas Campbell of the edition de luxe. It is a zinc etching reprint of the original copy of this historic document, which belongs to Mrs. Decima Campbell Barclay, the only surviving daughter of Alexander Campbell. It is printed on beautiful paper, handsomely bound, and contains the corrections made with a quill pen on its margin, both by its author, and by his son, Alexander Campbell. The genesis of this Declaration and Address is given in a prefatory note, as follows:

"At a meeting held at Buffalo, August 17, 1809, consisting of persons of different religious denominations, most of them in an unsettled state as to a fixed gospel ministry, it was unanimously agreed, upon the considerations and for the purposes hereinafter declared, to form themselves into a religious association, designated as above, which they accordingly did, and appointed twenty-one of their number to meet and confer together; and, with the assistance of Elder Thomas Campbell, minister of the gospel, to determine upon the proper means to carry into effect the important ends of their association, the result of which conference was the following declaration and address, printed at the expense and for the benefit of the society, September 7, 1809."

What a small and unpretentious beginning! How little did the chief actors know what was to flow out of these apparently ordinary proceedings! It resulted in a declaration of principles and an address to the public which gave rise to a religious movement whose rapid growth and influence on the religious thought of the time has, perhaps, been unprecedented in religious history.

Personally, we prize, beyond money, the splendid copy of this de luxe edition of this historic document, of which we learn there have been printed one thousand copies. This would make an ideal Christmas present for ministers, and we presume that the entire edition will be taken up at once. Applications should be made to the Centennial secretary, W. R. Warren, 203 Bissell Block, Pittsburg, Pa.

But what shall be done to scatter the cheaper edition of this Address throughout the religious world? It was addressed to "All that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, throughout all the churches." It would be a great thing if it could be put in the hands of the ministers of the various churches. Individual effort may do much in this direction, and we hope each one will do something toward this end.

JOHN JASPER. The Unmatched Negro Preacher and Philosopher. By W. E. Hatcher. Cloth, 12mo, $1. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Hundreds of people have heard of an old negro who preached a sermon on "De Sun Do Move," but they know not the name of this remarkable man. John Jasper was a powerful negro preacher of the old sort, a born leader and orator. Most people who have heard of this sermon and know nothing more of the man would conclude that he was an old ignoramus. These will be undeceived by the perusal of this story of Jasper written by Mr. Hatcher. A slave of more than forty years before the war, he lived for more than forty years after the war. A magnificent monument in Richmond, Va., marks his grave, placed there by a people who believe in the genuine great qualities of the man, and loved him for what he had accomplished. His famous sermon is included in this volume.

THE ANGEL AND THE STAR. By Ralph Connor. Fleming H. Revell Company.

This well-known writer, whose great success has hitherto been with such novels as "The Sky Pilot," and "The Doctor," has turned his facile pen to a brief, but fascinating portrayal of the birth of Christ. The reader is transported back two thousand years to the ancient city of Bethlehem as the chief shepherd is departing on his nightly watch upon the plains below. The story reflects the spirit of the times, but is not long and is a prose poem of sacred imagination. It ought to receive a warm welcome at this Christmastide.

TRAINING THE TEACHER. By A. P. Schauffler, Antoinette A. Lamoreaux, Martin G. Brumbaugh and Marion Lawrance. The Sunday School Times Company, Philadelphia. 50 cents and 35 cents.

This is an approved text-book for the First Standard Teacher Training Course. Mr. Shauffler writes twenty Bible lessons; Mrs. Lamoreaux writes ten lessons on the pupil: Mr. Brumbaugh writes ten lessons on the teacher, and Marion Lawrance writes ten lessons on the Sunday-school. There are also chapters by Charles A. Oliver and Ira Maurice Price. Simply to name the writers of this book is all that need be said to attract the attention of the great host now interested in teacher training. Every teacher of a teacher training class should have this book also.

AMERICANS OF TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW. By Senator Albert J. Beveridge. Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia. Cloth, 50 cents.

Senator Beveridge has written another interesting little book. In this he makes us see ourselves as others see us. He has had good opportunities for getting the viewpoints of many men, both of national and international reputation. Some of these viewpoints he brings to us in this book. If he emphasizes some of our weak points it is not merely in a critical spirit, but with the same purpose in view that a surgeon uses a knife. He himself is an optimist, and declares we need only cultivate belief in ourselves, conservatism, thoroughness and national righteousness, to reap the most bounteous harvest of good things that any nation has ever had.

EVENING THOUGHTS. For every day in the year. By J. R. Miller, author of "Morning Thoughts." 365 pages, 16mo, plain edges, 65 cents, net, gilt top 85 cents, net. Postage, 8 cents, additional.

This is a companion volume to the same author's "Morning Thoughts," issued with such success last year. The idea is to present little one-page talks based upon selected verses of scripture, which may be followed day by day, as a brief evening devotion. Dr. Miller is one of the most widely known, and most helpful of our devotional writers.

THE SINLESSNESS OF JESUS. By Max Meyer, pp. 46; The Virgin Birth, by Richard H. Grutzmacher, pp. 80; The Miracles of Jesus, by Karl Beth, pp. 77; The Gospel of St. John and The Synoptic Gospels, by Fritz Barth, pp. 87; The Resurrection of Jesus, by Edward Riggenbach, pp. 74; New Testament Parallels in Buddhistic Literature, by Karl von Hase, pp. 62. Eaton & Mains. Each 40 cents net.

These are admirable little volumes treating of theological problems of wide interest and of deep importance. The writers are all German scholars of the more conservative school, and what they have to say should receive great weight, both by thinkers of the same kind in America, and especially by those who are disposed to more progressive thought. In themselves they are an evidence that German thinkers are by no means of one type, and that the battle of theological opinions is being waged in that supposedly rationalistic country just as it is engaging men's attention in our homeland.

or exhaustive treatment of the Old Testament, but is intended rather to be a practical and devotional study of the books of the Old Testament with a view of benefiting the common, busy people. What most people need in order to a better acquaintance with the Scriptures is some one to guide them in their studies. This volume will be found a helpful guide to those who would like to form a better acquaintance with the different books of the Old Testament. They will be sure to gather many a helpful and inspiring thought from these studies, and on the whole will have a clearer view and a higher appreciation of the literature of the Old Testament by a careful perusal of these pages. We heartily commend it to such persons as, in these days of revival of interest in Biole study, would like to follow a devout and believing guide in the study of these sacred writings.

"THE TRUTH CONDENSED; OR HELPS FOR YOUNG PREACHERS." By G. K. Berry, Editor of the Pacific Christian, Portland, Ore. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis. Price, $1.00.

This is the second edition of the book, which is very well titled, "Truth Condensed," for the author does in small space condense a great deal of important historical information and Biblical truth. The chapters are brief and deal with important topics. They are practically sermon outlines, except that they have much more meat on the bones than the average skeleton sermon has. They are likely, therefore, to prove very suggestive and helpful for young ministers, for whom the book is specially intended.

The volume contains a biographical sketch of the author by R. E. Dunlap, of Seattle, Wash. The Editor of this paper came into personal touch with the family of Brother Berry at an early period in his boyhood home in Illinois, during a meeting held in a country church, during which he baptized a sister and received another sister of Brother Berry into the church, we believe, from the Baptists. W. B. and G. K., the two boys of the family, both were quite young at the time, and neither of them had, as yet, become connected with the religious body for which they have since rendered such useful service. We commend the work to young ministers as a safe and conservative guide in their theological investigations. The work can be secured through the Christian Publishing Company.

THE CONFESSION OF KENNEDY.

Charles Rann Kennedy, author of The Servant in the House, has had more inquiries made on the score of his religious and socialistic propensities than a man could ever answer. In one of these besieged moments Mr. Kennedy wrote this reply to a correspondent: "Strains in my soul, Roman Catholic, Quaker, Church-of-England-as-by-law-established, Greek pagan, atheist, and I feel the pull of them all. Am by birth, blood, breeding, and natural instinct, arrogant, aristocratic, blue-blooded Tory of old school; but by conviction of sin, in my eighteenth year and onwards, a socialist. Hate cant, sentimentality, lying—especially my own."

CHURCHILL FOR THE CABINET.

The report that Winston Churchill is to be secretary of the navy in President-elect Taft's Cabinet indicates that the literary man is at last coming into his own. Mr. Churchill is probably the best known and most widely read of American novelists, and what has been called "the Churchill vote" ought to have some influence. Readers of Mr. Churchill's novels will agree that he is not without qualifications for political life. His earlier stories, "Richard Carvel," "The Crisis," and "The Crossing," prove that he knows American history, and his knowledge of practical politics is shown plainly enough in his latest books "Coniston," and "Mr. Crewe's Career." The fact that he was educated at the Naval Academy at Annapolis and has always had a special interest in naval affairs gives appropriateness to the rumored appointment.

A COLLEGE PRESIDENT ON THE MINISTRY.

Three of the important books on the Macmillan list this fall are by college presidents. "The Seeming Unreality of the Spiritual Life," by President King of Oberlin, appeared in September; "The American as He Is," by President Butler of Columbia, is to be published in December; and "The Educational Ideal in the Ministry," by President Faunce of Brown, is out this week. Before he assumed his present position, President Faunce was for years one of the best known preachers of New York City, and he is recognized throughout the country as one of the leaders of thought in his own denomination. Because of his wide experience, both as preacher and educator, he is exceptionally well qualified to discuss the subject treated in his book, the basis of which was the author's Lyman Beecher lectures at Yale last year.

THE CHINESE MOTHER-IN-LAW.

In China the mother-in-law's position in the family admits of no doubt; she rules her son's wife. "A short time ago, when in Canton, an illustration of this was forcibly brought home to me," writes Frederick S. Isham, author of The Lady of the Mount, (Bobbs-Merrill Company) from the Far East. "A wife was found murdered. The husband was accused, and would have been convicted and had his head taken off, when—most obviously—his mother, the mother-in-law in the case, came forward. 'I did it myself,' she said calmly; 'the woman had a bad temper and answered back. So I punished her.' The judge acquitted the son, and, in accordance with Chinese law, inflicted a mere nominal fine on the mother-in-law. She and the son left the court with a look on their faces which seemed to say, here had been much ado about little."

A DOCTOR ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

A new book by the author of that delightful volume, "Confessio Medici," will receive a warm welcome, particularly when it is known that this most genial and human of physicians is to deal with a subject of very present interest. The title of the new book is "Faith and Works of Christian Science," and the various chapters will deal with such subjects as The Reality of Nature, Disease and Pain, Common Sense and Christian Science, and Authority and Christian Science. A feature of the book will be a critical examination of two hundred cases reported as cured by Christian Scientists.

"THE BIBLE FOR HOME AND SCHOOL."

Under the general title "The Bible for Home and School," The Macmillan Company has begun the publication of a series containing the books of the Bible in a form that should commend itself to all Bible students. At the outset there is a guarantee of the merit of this work in the fact that it is under the general editorship of Professor Shailer Mathews, of the University of Chicago, widely known as author, editor and theologian. The scheme of the series has indeed signal merits, to judge from its first volume, "The Epistle to the Hebrews," edited by Professor Edgar J. Goodspeed, of the University of Chicago. There is an Introduction of thirty pages devoted to a discussion of Text, Canonicity, Authorship, Persons Addressed, Occasion and Purpose, Date and Place of Composition, Style and Language, Analysis of the Epistle and Bibliography. Then follows the text and commentary, the notes being printed at the bottom of the page and so made easy of reference. An exhaustive index completes a volume of about one hundred and thirty pages. Professor Goodspeed's introduction and commentary are conservative and in the spirit of the best modern scholarship. It would be impossible for the average Bible student to read the Epistle to the Hebrews in this edition without gaining a clearer idea than ever before of its religious and literary and historical importance. The text used is that of the standard revised version, with quotations from the Psalms printed in metrical form in the style of Professor Moulton's Modern Readers' Bible, and with such slight departures from the revised version as have been suggested in the interest of a more faithful translation.

NEW MACMILLAN BOOKS.

The Macmillan Company is publishing this week the sixth and final volume of the Eversley edition of the works of Tennyson, annotated by the poet and edited by his son; "Specimens of Exposition and Argument," by Milton Percival and R. A. Jelliffe, of Oberlin College; "New Zealand," painted by F. and W. Wright, described by the Hon. W. P. Reeves; "The Light Side of Egypt," painted and described by Lance Thackerray; and "Southern Spain," painted by Trevor Haddon, described by A. F. Calvert.

BY THE CHRISTMAS FIRE.

One of the books of the present holiday season is a new volume with the inviting title, "By the Christmas Fire" (Houghton Mifflin Co.), containing the latest essays by Dr. Samuel M. Crothers, who has been called "the Oliver Wendell Holmes of the present day," and "the greatest essayist since Charles Lamb." One of his first books was a holiday juvenile, called "Miss Muffett's Christmas Party," which has gone through five editions since its publication in 1902. In 1903 "The Gentle Reader," his first volume of essays, appeared and immediately established his reputation as an essayist, one edition after another being called for. His second volume of essays, "The Pardoner's Wallet," came out in 1905. In this same year he published his Harvard Ingersoll Lecture, "The Endless Life." In spite of the title of his present book, most of his writing is done at his summer camp at Silver Lake, N. H. Situated high on a hill this camp commands an inspiring view of the Ossipee and Chocorua Ranges and there this modern successor of Lamb and Holmes sits and writes his genial, discursive essays in the intervals between his tramps along the country roads and over the hills.

NEXT YEAR'S ST. NICHOLAS.

A jolly feature of St. Nicholas in 1909 will be a series of rhymes and pictures by W. W. Denslow, the illustrator of "The Wizard of Oz," "Father Goose," etc. "When I Grow Up" will be the title of the series, which will portray the "day dreams" of an American youngster. The very little folks are to have more pictures and stories all their own in St. Nicholas in 1909 than ever before. One series of an originality and humor to charm the whole household, will be a set of "storiettes" called "Dr. Daddiman's Stories." They are to have illustrations by Fanny Y. Cory. There is to be a new "Queen Silverbell" story by Frances Hodgson Burnett, "The Spring Cleaning"—the best yet, it is promised. And in 1909, too, Mrs. Rebecca Harding Davis will contribute a set of brief little talks under such taking titles as "What We Can," "A New Year's Help," "Three Useful Lives," "Homely Hints for Everyday," etc. These, of course, are only a few of the features.

ABOUT GREAT MEN.

The Century in 1909 will have some remarkable articles on Lincoln, including unpublished documents from his own pen. The great sculptor Saint-Gaudens wrote his autobiography just before he died; The Century will print it. There will be an interview with the great pianist Paderewski. Andrew Carnegie is writing on the tariff for it. Articles by Grover Cleveland's nearest friends will tell the intimate story of his life. Mrs. Rice, the author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," will contribute a great novel, and Thompson Seton a splendid new tale of animal life. The colored pictures will be more beautiful than ever.

Appleton's Magazine for December is an interesting number, its fiction being especially strong. One might mention "The Renaissance" as one of the best stories, though "The Green Scarab" holds the attention to the last. There is a well illustrated article on the great irrigation plant in Western Nevada known as the Truckee-Carson Project. Prof. G. Stanley Hall writes on "Spooks and Telepathy," and Frank Fayant on "The Real Owners of America," in which he states that two and one-half million investors own the American corporations, and that twenty million thrifty Americans are indirect partners in corporate ventures, which is a rather different view from that generally held. Dr. Aked has another article under the general head of "The Salvation of Christianity," taking up science and religion. His view-point, of course, is modern, and he seeks to explain that much of the alleged conflict between the two comes from the confusion of religion and theology. Doctor Aked is worth reading after, but he sometimes takes himself too seriously, and his subject not seriously enough.

The American Magazine is one of the brightest that we have. In the December number there are many features worth while. The first story by Stewart Edward White is a charming one—the beginning of a series of stories of boy life. Ida M. Tarbell has a second chapter on "How Chicago is Finding Herself," and Prof. W. I. Thomas writes on "The Mind of Woman." Ray Stanard Baker is beginning a series of articles under the general title "The Spiritual Unrest." His first article published in this number takes up a subject that is being widely discussed at the present time, namely, healing the sick in the churches. It is a subject that was discussed at our recent Congress in Chicago. Mr. Baker concludes thus: "In the final analysis it makes little real difference to you or to me what profession does the new work, whether doctor or minister, or a combination of the two, so long as it is done. The final test is service, and to that end institutions and professions must shape themselves. Men, after all, whether ill or well, will follow those leaders who can give them hope, courage, faith, health, virtue, to enable them to meet the inevitable difficulties and trials of this life with a happier face and a serener soul. In any event, the fine new work will go on whether the church in its present form leads it or not. For that way lies truth." We understand that Mr. Baker has a mass of important and vastly interesting facts, and his articles will probably cause some discussion. They are presented in the right spirit and are intended to do good. The title of a notable future article is "The Ungodliness of New York City."

Putnam's Monthly has a beautiful frontispiece entitled "The Rainbow at Sea," with a poem by Edith M. Thomas. The first article gives a very lucid account of the new nation of Bulgaria, with illustrations. Hugh C. Weir tells how the canal builders are making the dirt fly at Panama. This is, also, well illustrated. Quite a unique contribution is the description of an American Oberammergau, or a passion play by American Indians, which is given on the Kamloops Reservation in British Columbia. It tells of the wonderful work accomplished by a very brilliant French priest. There is an admirably illustrated article on the Milton Ter-Centenary. Some good fiction and the usual columns of "the lounger" make up a very interesting number of this excellent periodical.

SOME OF OUR BIBLE SCHOOLS

MOWEAQUA, ILL.

Dr. F. D. Pratt, supt.; Miss Jennie Manzy, secretary; Miss O'Dessa Pool, treasurer; Miss Bessie Evans, librarian; Miss Mary Rice, pianist. Enrollment, 125; attendance, 100.

This school has a teacher training class of 14, graduated in June, and another class organized. Its weekly collection is not less than $3, and its birthday collection goes to missions.

DES MOINES, IA.

Capitol Hill.

A. J. Small, supt.; Frank Hervey, asst.; Miss Mattie Banghart, sec.; Misses Irene Evans and May Wheeler, assts.; Miss Nora Crooks, supt. primary department. Enrollment, 425; average attendance, 340.

There is a primary department, and the general school of sixteen classes is graded according to size. The Bible class numbers 50, the young men's class 40, while a most remarkable class is one of boys from 11 to 13 years, numbering about 50. A teachers' meeting is held weekly for the study of the lesson. There are rooms for more than half the classes, but not good accommodations for the others. The primary occupies the basement of the church. The average collection is $4.75, and this is taken up in each class. A birthday collection is taken each Sunday for missions. This school is the largest on the east side of the city. For a long time this church had the largest number of any church in this vicinity. The school is seventy-five ahead of its record a year ago, and indications are for an increase this winter. It is competing with its own record and this is creating much interest. It is hoped that the church building will be enlarged next year, and improved equipment provided for all.

Charles L. Engle,

University Church.

Dr. G. A. Huntoon, supt.; Vinnie Nourse, sec.; J. A. Burton, first asst. supt. Enrollment, 1,500; average attendance, 800.

The school has three departments—primary, intermediate and Bible. The young ladies' class is taught by Mrs. H. M. Mitchell. This is the largest class of its kind in the brotherhood. There are two teacher training classes. Three hundred and twelve dollars has been given to missions this year. The school is in the best organized and graded condition that it has been for some time. The intermediate department is divided into a boys' and girls' intermediate, with a special superintendent for each, whose duty it is to keep in close touch with the needs. There is a live home department, and also a cradle roll. The hour of meeting has been changed from noon to 9:45 a. m. While there may be a difference for a time, the feeling is that in the long run the school will be benefited. The superintendent reports great hindrance by lack of equipment and room, two of the college buildings having to be used; but in the near future the new building will give better opportunity for work.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.

South Street.

W. R. Self, supt.; W. T. Carrington, J. B. Mack and R. E. Lee, assts.; Earle B. Hopkins, secretary; Dr. H. Boatner, treasurer; Marjorie Phinney, organist; Emory Moffett, librarian. Enrollment, 450; average attendance, about 300.

This school has forty departments, with a superintendent over each. All the classes except the primary department are organized, and each has a president, vice-president and secretary. There is also a teacher training class. There is much need of better equipment. The general collection in classes averages about $6, and there is always money on hand. Twenty-five dollars is paid to state work, and collections are made for missions. The Philathea class for young ladies enrolls 50, with an average attendance of 35. They have a monthly paper edited by the class. There are about 35 in the young men's Baraca class, with an average attendance of 30, and a splendid interest. There is a good orchestra composed of twelve young men and one or two young ladies.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

First Church.

Dr. J. David Glover, supt.; Mrs. J. N. Beaty, asst.; Miss Elma Sweeney, secretary; R. A. Chadwick, treasurer; Miss Eva Shannon, intermediate supt.; Mrs. M. I. Lucas, primary supt. Enrollment, 382; average attendance, 294.

This school has five departments and nine organized classes, most of them having some special work. Two teacher training classes have been organized, one of young people meeting in the Sunday school, and one of regular teachers and others. There is no special equipment beyond a fairly arranged building. This school has given $30 to one church, $50 to the state board, and its Children's day offering to missions was $106.31. This school is in process of thorough grading. The teachers think this will make their work easier and more satisfactory in every way. Dr. Glover says the organization of classes has been of great benefit. The offerings and attendance this year will average more than last.

FAYETTEVILLE, ARK.

First Christian.

P. R. Davidson, supt.; J. A. Shelton, asst.; Louise Feldt, secretary; Dallas Smith, chorister; Lucille Gilbreath, organist; Guy MacDonald, librarian. Enrollment, 200; average attendance, 160.

There are two special classes in this school besides a union teacher training class made up of different schools. The first primary is a class of which the school is proud. It has an enrollment of 60 pupils and an average attendance of 40, and is one of the brightest classes in the school. "The Daughters of Dorcas" is a class composed of young married ladies, organized about eight months ago with seven members. They now have an enrollment of over 30, and the best average attendance of any class in the school. They have the distinction of raising enough money in less than three years to buy and install a handsome pipe organ for the church. The average collection for the present quarter has been a trifle over $4. The school takes a collection on Children's day for foreign missions.

WATSEKA, ILL.

C. E. Matkin, supt.; Noah Ash and H. Marxmiller, assts.; Clarence Scholl, secretary; Fred M. Tobey, treasurer; G. Edward Arnold, supt. of music; R. Elmore Sinclair, pastor. Enrollment, 210; average attendance last quarter, 187; average this quarter, nearer 200.

This school is organized on the graded plan, there being seventeen classes: A beginners' and a primary department, six junior, six intermediate and three adult department classes. "The Excelsior" Bible class, with J. O. Reeder, teacher, has an enrollment of 82 people over the age of 30. It is completely organized. "The Optimist" (young people's) class is in two sections, with 24 men and 33 ladies enrolled. This class constantly works for the young people of the church. The teacher training class, numbering 42, has been organized only six or seven weeks. This school is supplied with all the paraphernalia of a modern Bible school, and has separate class rooms for nearly all classes, and a devoted band of teachers, who are seldom absent. The weekly collection averages $4.50 for running expenses. No special stress is laid on giving. In the way of missionary offerings, the school gave last year $33 for home missions, $70 for benevolences, $75 on Children's day up until September 30, and expects to give $60 for home missions, with indications pointing to more.

CAMP POINT, ILL.

W. F. Jones, supt.; A. E. Gray, asst.; Miss Nellie Renshaw, sec.; Mrs. Hattie Downing, treas.; Miss Myrtle Garrett, organist; Mrs. Carrie B. Judy, asst. Enrollment, 210; average attendance, 150.

There are five organized classes. J. H. Garrett is teacher of the organized men's class, with thirty-six enrolled, and an average attendance of twenty. Mrs. Lena Roath has a class of boys with an average attendance of sixteen, and there is a teacher training class. There are four class rooms, two of them with blackboards, besides the lecture room and main auditorium. The weekly collection is $3.50. The effort is simply to make the Bible school interesting and helpful, and there is always enough money for the needs of the school. All special days are observed, and seldom if ever is the apportionment not raised. At present this school is working under a disadvantage by the church being decorated. Towards this the Sunday school gave $50. It is meeting at present in the opera house.

Dr. F. D. Pratt,
Superintendent at Moweaqua, Ill.

DELTA, IOWA.

J. C. Reed, supt.; Lizzie Dunn, asst. supt.; Leonora Brainard, secretary; Mary Reynolds, treasurer. Enrollment, 250; average attendance, 200.

The church elects the superintendent of this school, and he appoints all officers. There are no special classes at present, and the equipment is slight, except the regular supplies and Bibles and song books. The average collection is $5, which is taken by classes and reported at the close of the school. To foreign missions $50 to $100 is given; to state Bible school work $20; to the St. Louis Orphans' Home, from $40 to $45 each year. Mr. Reed has been superintendent of the school for fifteen years, and has never had any serious trouble as to the attendance or finances after the first two or three years. The population of the town is only 800, and the Methodist Episcopal church has Sunday-school at the same hour. The members feel they have a fine school, which ranks fifth or sixth place among the schools in the state.

Our Budget

—The holiday season approaches.

—Make it one of good cheer.

—Think of the other man as well as of yourself.

—The Christian Publishing Company has a supply of books and holiday novelties that may interest you.

—As this paper is being circulated, representatives of nearly all the great religious bodies of America are in session in Philadelphia, where the Federation Council meets this week.

—Reports from everywhere indicate evangelistic zeal. Converts are being made north, south, east and west.

—Several special numbers have crowded out some of our regular features, but we hope now to have more space for these.

—The "Overture for Peace," which we published last week from the Indianapolis ministers, was received too late for editorial comment. It is only necessary, however, that we express our hearty approval of the wise and conservative spirit and sentiment of this overture. It is the only path to peace. It may be set down as a certainty that this brotherhood is not going to sacrifice the principle of Christian liberty, which is involved in the opposition to the Centennial program. We realize the importance of ceasing to carry on newspaper controversy over this matter in any spirit of partisan strife. We can not be faithful, however, to our duty to the public, as a religious journal, without emphasizing the principle which underlies this opposition to the action of the Centennial committee. We have been discussing the principle involved, rather than the personal feature, so that the issue might be unclouded with personal likes and dislikes. Our brotherhood must be made to see, with clearness and distinctness, the fundamental principle involved in this controversy, and once they see it there is no question as to their decision.

—We are always glad to call the attention of our readers to the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and to the day which is set apart in the interest of that great organization. We publish some matter elsewhere relating to the day, and we trust that our churches everywhere will give due recognition to this day, in view of the splendid work which our Christian women are doing, both in the home and the foreign field, and for the spiritual life and development of our churches.

—We have been accustomed, as a religious body, standing on the broad platform of Christian unity enunciated by the pioneers of this movement, to speak disparagingly of "heresy trials" as conducted by our religious neighbors to test the theological soundness of certain ministers among them, whose views were supposed to be unorthodox. But if we are to have "heresy trials" at all, would it not be more just, more dignified, more Christian, to summon an ecclesiastical court, where the accused would have an opportunity of making defense before his accusers, than to condemn a minister unheard, on mere newspaper reports, with a religious journal as prosecutor, and its readers, who are not allowed to see the defense of the accused, as jury?

J. M. Elam.

three evangelists under whose leadership the great Marion, Ind., tent campaign was conducted a few years ago. He has the strong recommendations of such men as Judge C. J. Scofield, S. S. Jones, Z. T. Sweeney, J. H. O. Smith, W. J. Wright, and members of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST force. Brother Elam is now making dates and can furnish a singer if desired. He is at present in a meeting at Festus, Mo., but his permanent home is Litchfield, Ill.

—The fact that the line between faith and opinion may be difficult to draw at some points, does not argue that the distinction between the two realms is not, in general, very marked. It is difficult, for instance, to draw the line where daylight ends and darkness begins, but day and night are very distinct periods of time, and possess very distinct characteristics, so that no man with eyes is likely to mistake the one for the other. When there is doubt as to whether any given position belongs to faith or opinion, Brother Spencer's advice indicates the obvious Christian course: Judge each other with charity; give your brother the benefit of the doubt.

—Preston B. Hall takes up his work in Virginia Christian College at once. He will be a valuable acquisition to this admirable institution.

—A very excellent meeting has been held by R. A. Hamlin and Leonard Daugherty at Lake Charles, La., and Brother Hawkins tells about it in another column.

—A. C. Bragg, the last pastor of the old First Church, Fitzgerald, Ga., which has united with the Central Church, has taken up the work at Guyton, Ga.

—We publish some account on another page of the dedication of our new building at East Orange, N. J. All concerned in this deserve the greatest of credit.

—An evangelist and singer is wanted for a meeting in January, and none but the best need apply. Recommendations should be sent to J. E. Stebbins, Whitten, Iowa.

—Bishop M. Hopkins has started his work at Erick, Okla., with good prospects. Forty have been enrolled in the teacher training work, and two additions to the membership are reported.

—The editor of this paper would like to buy or borrow a copy of the Life of Thomas Campbell, by his son Alexander, and of Barton W. Stone. Address, Editor THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis, Mo.

—The house of worship just completed at Neodesha, Kan., is to be dedicated by L. L. Carpenter next Lord's day. Under the ministry of J. W. Carpenter the congregation has been enjoying a large measure of success.

—We are in a position to put some church in communication with one of our faithful and successful young ministers, who has had several years of fruitful experience in a difficult field. He has no family other than a consecrated wife.

—Rally day at Stanford, Ill., was a splendid success, there being 203 present and an offering of $43.50. There is a fine corps of teachers there led by an up-to-date superintendent, F. E. Garst, and C. W. Marlow is the pastor.

—"The next thing is a new building," writes J. F. Hay, of Glasgow, Kan. We hear that the Alpha Class there has presented the Bible school with a fine piano recently, and the Ladies' Aid has purchased new seats for the church.

—We very much regret to learn of the death of Mrs. W. F. Rothenberger, wife of the minister of the Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, O. She was the daughter of Brother and Sister A. R. Teachout, and a woman of fine talent and Christian devotion.

—I. N. Grisso is conducting his own meeting at Waveland, Ind., and is being assisted by F. E. Trucksess in the music. Some of Brother Grisso's topics are "The Grandest Work in the World," "Mr. and Mrs. Lot," "Rome, Paul and God's Dynamite."

—The Central Christian Church Sunday-school of San Antonio, Tex., observed boys and girls' rally day and sent $51.66 to the Home Missionary Board. This school took the prize last year in the state of Texas, and hopes to win it again this year. J. E. Adams is the superintendent.

—Charles H. Caton is doing a fine work at Savannah, Mo., where the conditions have been very difficult. Everybody speaks in the highest praise of the meeting just held by the pastor. Brother Caton is a preacher of exceptional ability, and a larger field will, no doubt, claim him ere long.

—W. A. Webster has resigned his work at Rifle, Colo., to take effect on or before January 1. We are sorry that he finds this necessary. Brother Webster has done a good work, and we trust it will not be long until he is again busy. His new field of labor has not yet been decided upon.

—J. Will Walters has accepted the call from the church at Sullivan, Ill., beginning December 1. He will move his family from Niantic January 1. Here is where Charles Reign Scoville held a big meeting two years ago with 700 additions. Applicants for the Niantic pulpit should address the clerk of the church, N. A. Boone.

—H. A. Eicher sailed on Nov. 21 for India on the steamship Columbia. His address will be Harda, Central Provinces, India. He orders THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to follow him, expressing his appreciation of it. and his desire not to be without it. This is the report that comes from many mission fields.

—It is because brethren do "cherish a deep love for the cause our fathers contended for," that they will repudiate the spirit of intolerance that is leading some to make their own opinions an essential part of the faith, and therefore tests of fellowship. This is foreign to the plea of our fathers, and in direct opposition to it.

—R. B. Helser has accepted a call to the church at Centralia, Mo., to assume charge the first Lord's day in January. His successor at Fayette, Mo., where he has had four and one half years' successful ministry, has not yet been chosen. Communication with regard to this should be addressed to T. B. Chenoweth, secretary of the church board.

—Talmage DeFrees has resigned at Frankford, Mo., to take the work at East St. Louis, on January 1. There is a strong, well-organized congregation of 350 members at Frankford. The congregation is well-to-do, and they will pay a minister $1,000 salary. It is hoped that the new building will be well under way at East St. Louis by the time of the Centennial.

—Evangelists Breeden and Saxton have had a great time at Eureka, Ill., where there were 10 additions. Brother Breeden made a pleasant call on THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST force on his way home, and he and Mrs. Breeden start at once for California for a brief rest. Brother Saxton has been at Sabina, Ohio, with Brother Brundige, and is to be with Brother Breeden at Fresno, Cal., in February.

—S. C. Brock has had a very successful year in the pastorate at Laurens, Iowa. Recently he held a meeting at Sutherland, in the same state, and revived a decadent church, and arranged for a salary of $800 to be paid some active young man, who will work there and at Larrabee, about eight miles distant. Those desiring to inquire about the place should write Brother Brock at Laurens, at once.

—S. D. Dutcher has resigned the pastorate of the First Christian Church at Omaha, Neb., and accepted a call to the Central Church of Terre Haute, Ind. Brother Dutcher has had a successful career, and has recently seen one of our best church buildings erected by his congregation. The brethren at Omaha have a good man in view as his successor and do not, therefore, invite general correspondence. Brother Dutcher will enter upon the work at Terre Haute, January 1. He succeeds L. E. Sellers, who recently entered the evangelistic field.

SOME ANNOUNCED PLANS FOR C. W. B. M. DAY

The correspondence coming to the secretary's desk indicates a widespread co-operation in the purpose to present the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to the churches some time during the month of December.

The large majority will use the first Sunday. This is preferable and is to be commended. Then many auxiliaries that observe the day the first Sunday have been asked to reproduce their program in some nearby church where there is no auxiliary.

A number of pastors will exchange pulpits in the presentation of the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions on this annual missionary day. State officers, national officers, state missionaries (organizers) are to aid in this service during December. There is a great call for missionaries as speakers. We could use one hundred like those we now have home on furlough and ready for such service.

A number of auxiliaries and churches will use the stereopticon views. The national executive committee has three sets in the field. Kentucky, California and Michigan have their own views and machines. A number of individuals and auxiliaries have arranged for these also.

Orders for supplies show great interest. One hundred thousand C. W. B. M. day collection envelopes have been sent out. Orders for these are still coming in. Fifty thousand C. W. B. M. day program folders are in circulation. The second edition of "Snapshots from the New Orleans Convention" is exhausted.

The day will be observed in all lands where there is a Christian church, and an offering will be taken for the work. Two years ago Providence, Jamaica, sent to headquarters the first C. W. B. M. day offering, $6.50. Bilaspur, India, has an auxiliary of sixty members. Each member will make an offering. Jamaica has an auxiliary of seventy members. The very poorest will bring a gift.

In hundreds of churches a great gift of women is to crown the day's work. A message just received from Des Moines says: "When the call for new members is made, it is planned to have at least one hundred women ready to respond, each with a gift of at least one new name." The inspiration of such an event will sweep an audience forward to the plane of a great and a worthy effort. We used this plan last year and have been convinced of its power.

Large gifts will pour into the treasury. Many will become life members of the national organization and pay $25. These life membership gifts can be paid in five annual installments, two yearly payments or by cash. Shares of $50 each, for station support, will be taken by many. By station support is meant the expense account in the various missions aside from the salaries of the workers.

Word just comes that Mason City, Iowa, will become a living link. This is the largest auxiliary in the world. Other societies will announce living links later. One state hopes to find five living links this year.

The first report of the observance of the day comes from Hutchinson, Kan., as follows: "Had a great C. W. B. M. day yesterday. Raised $800. Rejoice with us. All happy here. Sincerely, O. L. Cook." For local reasons an advance date was chosen. Brother Menzies is their living link.

With great hope for the day,
Mrs. M. E. Harlan.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA

By A. F. HENSEY

Mrs. Hensey and myself have just returned from a ten days' excursion up the Bosira River. Through the kindness of the commissaire of this district, we went up on the S. S. "Maringa" and returned on one of the steamers of the Trading Society, known as the "S. A. B.," the director very kindly allowing us the use of his own cabin. Much might be written of what we saw in all this journey, but I shall try to tell you only of the new work which we have opened up in the neighborhood of Bussira, the headquarters of the S. A. B. Dr. Widdowson and I made the first visit to this district last January, and in the towns of Besengo and Bonyeka we now have seven evangelists and 700 enrolled inquirers. Of these latter, fully 100 seem intensely earnest.

The work at Bonyeka is beyond description. Our entrance was a triumphal march, and we were soon surrounded by hundreds of welcoming natives, the greater part of whom had never before seen a white woman. Some who came after we had gone into the house set apart for our use fought for a peep into the doors and windows, and it seemed for a time that they would break down the flimsy walls.

Then they sounded the great wooden drum and the people assembled to hear God's message. Picture if you will a great spreading-branched palaver tree, and you can see the auditorium nature had provided for us. Within the ample shade of this African temple sat a great circle of red-painted natives. In the center of one side sat the chiefs and old men, each in his own chair of state, with a curious broad-bladed knife in his right hand. To their left sat the young warriors, uneasy with the spirit of those who are more used to the battle-ground than the temple, and beyond them the boys, as fidgety as the boys of any land. To the right the women and girls were huddled in a shapeless mass, as full of giggles and gossip as might be expected. The other side of the circle was made up of those who are more earnestly seeking for the Light. These sang with much zest, if little tune, "There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus," and then came the Message.

In this concourse sat more than 800 people. It was the moment of a lifetime, and so knew our Bolenge boys. I wish that some who doubt the wisdom of missions could have seen one of these, Iyokansombo, as I first saw him; the longest, lankest and awkwardest boy who ever struck a mission station, and then have seen him as he stood at that supreme moment. As if conscious of the hour and the dignity of the message, he seemed to stand a little straighter and taller, and as he "reasoned of righteousness, and self-control, and the judgment to come" and pressed home the claim of Jesus Christ as the Savior and King of men, the whispering and fidgeting died away, and in tense eagerness they leaned forward to catch every word.

The service over, the elders remained. Then arose Lonjatake, the hereditary chief, who in his own town is as autocratic as the Czar, ponderous in the dignity befitting a man who has 210 wives and 40 houses in which they live. Thus said he: "White man, the words of God which you have spoken to us feel very good in our stomachs. If our young people agree them, it will be good for Bonyeka. At Bolenge there are other missionaries. Why don't you and mamma stay here with us? We will build you a house and you shall teach us of your new 'witch-doctor,' whom you call Jesus, and perhaps even we old men will agree to Him." We explained to them the present impossibility of a mission station there, but they agreed to build at once a large house in which to worship God.

I do not think that I ever stood in the presence of a greater opportunity, so tinged with sadness. Here is this great population, twenty times as large as that of Bolenge; their hearts are open. Neither the vices of civilization nor sleeping sickness have reached that far. If we could but strike while the iron is hot! But to secure a mission site there means a wait of probably two years, and Bonyeka is 250 miles from Bolenge, making frequent itineration impossible. Oh, for a steamer, be it ever so small!

You would not believe me if I should tell you the number of people that could be reached with the Gospel by means of a suitable steamer.

We are so few that the vastness of our field casts always a shadow over us—the darkness which comes over the heart when as we see all these people without the changing power of the One who is the fairest among ten thousand. As you pray, will you remember to pray "for us also, that God may open unto us a door for the Word," that these two millions of people may be saved both for the life that now is and for the life yet to be?

The Georgia State Convention

The sixtieth annual convention of the Georgia Churches of Christ convened with the Central Church, of Fitzgerald, November 9-12. In some respects this convention did not measure up to former conventions; in others it was fine. Howard T. Cree, vice-president, presided in his usual dignified manner.

Monday evening was given to devotions and a sermon by E. R. Clarkson, a missionary under the state board. One young lady confessed her faith in Christ.

Tuesday morning was given to reports from the various districts. Talks were made by Brothers McDonald, Clarkson, Hook, Roper and others. Bernard P. Smith, secretary of state missions, reported more than four hundred additions under work of the state board, and also a neat sum of money in the treasury. The convention was favored with a fine address by H. A. Denton, which was followed by a call for pledges for state work. About $1,000 was pledged, which was much less than last year. This was caused by the small attendance. Fitzgerald is to one side of the state, and there are but few churches in that section. Wisdom teaches that, as a rule, our conventions should be held in the heart of our church population.

Tuesday afternoon was occupied by addresses by L. M. Omer, of Sandersville, on "Lining Up the Church," and Howard J. Brazelton, of Macon, on "How to Increase the Efficiency of the Churches." These addresses were very helpful and will do great good. The latter part of the afternoon was given to the Woman's Society of Georgia Missions. Mrs. B. O. Miller, of Augusta, is president. Much work was reported, with three new churches organized. Miss Mabel Langford delivered a fine address on "Woman's Work."

At the evening session a crowded house listened to a masterful address by J. J. Haley, of Eustis, Fla. Brother Haley represented the Foreign Mission Board. His address made a deep impression.

Wednesday was a very busy day. Hearing reports of committees took a large part of the morning. The committee on place reported Winder as the place for the next convention, but after much discussion the convention voted to go to Dublin, a new town in Central Georgia, which has a magnificent new stone church building. We shall all labor and pray for a great convention in 1909. These reports were followed by enthusiastic addresses by Pres. Ashley S. Johnson and Secretary James H. Mohorter. These brethren stirred the convention until there was hardly a dry eye in the audience. Brother Shaw took an offering for our benevolences, which amounted to over $500. Brother Denton spoke again to the delight of all. Our Georgia churches will ever welcome H. A. Denton to her annual gatherings.

The C. W. B. M. utilized the afternoon with a profitable discussion. Mrs. H. K. Pendleton, of Atlanta, presided. Much work was done.

The night session was crowded to its utmost with a session of the Education Society, an address by Mrs. L. M. Omer, of Sandersville, on "Centennial Aims of the C. W. B. M.," and an address by Marion Stevenson, of the Christian Publishing Company. Brother Stevenson gave a Bible study each morning on our Bible school work. which will increase the efficieney of our Bible school work all over the state. His work will be lasting in its effect for good. We hope to see Brother Stevenson in Georgia many times in the future.

Thursday morning was given to a business session. There was no afternoon session. Addresses were made in the evening by Pres. Johnson and Brother Stevenson. These were of a high order. This closed the sixtieth annual session of the Georgia Christian Missionary Society.

The Church in Columbia, Mo.

I spent nineteen days in this beautiful little city, justly famed as the Athens of Missouri. I had exceptional opportunities of studying the condition of our cause in this Mecca of the faith. I know of no city of similar size in the brotherhood where such a splendid combination of factors and forces and conditions are at work for the achievement of great ends. The State University, with its two thousand students, enrolls this year more than four hundred Disciples of Christ. Christian College, for young women, —one of the greatest, if not the greatest woman's college in the west—brings annually a large constituency to the church from the best and most cultured homes of the middle west. Here, too, the Missouri Bible College, with strong, scholarly students like Lhamon and Sharpe, is equipping young men for the highest ministry of the Word. And these pour the tides of their lives into the Church. The church itself, with a glorious history and the heritage of some of the noblest minds and hearts of our Reformation, is the dominant and commanding force of the city. The church still holds and cherishes some of the rarest and choicest spirits of the brotherhood in Mrs. Pearre, founder of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions; Dr. W. T. Moore, the sage and cosmopolite, F. W. Allen, and a score of others, scarcely less famed.

But the predominant force in the Columbia church to-day is Madison A. Hart, the gifted, cultured, consecrated minister. He is young, vigorous, virile, vital. He is aware of the spirit of the age and is interpreting to it the glorious gospel of the Son of God. He is far from being a moss-back, and he lacks much of being a destructive radical. He is loyal to the Lord Jesus—absolutely loyal in message and method and ministry. He enjoys the confidence and the affection of everybody in Columbia, both in and out of the church. Unless every indication goes awry he is entering upon a career of unparalleled success with all the conditions of triumph at hand—the field, the force and the consecrated passion for Jesus and for souls.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Tokyo Letter.

The cold stiff wind we faced in leaving the Golden Gate was in marked contrast to our reception at Honolulu. Here the air was balmy and soft zephyrs, that had kissed many a palm and scent-burdened bloom, passed on to sport with the breakers, whose dazzling whiteness marked the parting line between the rich blue of the ocean and the restful green of Oahu's tropical profusion. Here we dropped anchor for ten hours. Many native boys had swum close to the great ship's side to catch a dive for the coins which passengers tossed to them. The Manchuria's wenches and derricks were soon receiving and passing out tons of freight. Tourists hastened here and there to do Honolulu and get back by sailing time. As the armoured cruiser fleet was near at hand the city was gay with flags and bunting. Everywhere, whether on the streets or street cars one could see mingling freely with Americans, Japanese, Chinese and native Hawaiians. If you visit Honolulu do not fail to go to Waihiki Beech. Here surfboats ride toward the shore with the ocean swells which break our hidden coral reefs. Further in you can stand or lie on a plank and race up to the sandy beech with the crest of a mighty wave fretting and foaming in your wake.

That evening as we lifted anchor, to the west was the sinking sun just touching the briny blue and a golden glory was splashed all over the western sky. To the east, resting upon the mountains were dark storm clouds, in front of which a rainbow stood out bold and high circling from Punch Bowl to Diamond Head. Nestled within these contrasts of color lay the city, our ship and its wharf. The boat's decks, the gangway and the landings were swarming with living souls from many lands. Standing space was littered with the petals of bouquets and wreaths which with a kiss or a smile friends had thrown at one another. All the while Honolulu's noted band was playing alternately the favorite airs of each nation. There seemed to be no color line, no race line. The occasion really seemed typical of heaven—for here was beauty of landscape, safety of harbor and fraternity, love and good will. Could each one present have passed on to his own countrymen the spirit of the hour peace would reign on earth. As we steamed out further and further and the gem of the Pacific receded from view my longings were that the earth's kingdoms might soon fall to the scepter of the One altogether lovely.

We awoke on September 11 to find we had already anchored in Yokahoma harbor. Eight years ago when we came to Japan we were met by Miss Levina Oldham and P. A. Davey, and here again was the same kind hearted Davey to grip our hands and to welcome us back to Japan and the work. When we landed the first time there was not a single Japanese to meet us. This time they were on hand. Among them was Imamura San, the secretary of the governor of Formosa; Kondo San, an enterprising importer, and Kawai San, who attended Drake University. Among the many who called at our home in Tokyo shortly after was Frank Otsuka, well known in the Central States, and Miss Kate V. Johnson, just returned and now the senior missionary of our group. Our missionaries, every one, as well as scores of Japanese, have given us a royal welcome back to Japan. And how could it be otherwise? Take the world over you will not find a better balanced and equipped lot of missionaries, both in heart and mind, than represent the Disciples in Japan. It seems strange that the Weavers, the Guys and the Stevenses are not here. Ill health and bad climate make great gaps in the ranks. We miss the beloved ones who have gone and must go, yet there is peace and good cheer and a hustle about our band that warrants success in all the King's business.

A few days after landing I was delighted, among other evidences of our growth as a mission, to attend the dedication of Miss Mary Rioch's new two-story day school building. She is a sister of our David Rioch, of India. Some twelve years ago she opened a charity school in a closely packed district of Tokyo. Her work has grown with the years. Hers is the victory of love and prayer, of waiting and self-denial. Her school is a grand success. It has governmental patronage and each pupil now pays a fee. The school will accommodate 200. There is a daily attendance of 158. The children being gathered from many homes, Miss Rioch has a leverage on the whole community. Consequently, her Bible school and Bible women's meetings are well attended. This fall she will open a new kindergarten department. I have often thought it was a pity that our people at home could not see Miss Rioch on rainy days with mud up to the ankle, go from home to home on her missions of mercy. Although the churches may forget to pay for all such on the firing line, heaven will surely honor them and the King will stand by them as he promised. Some time back an old lady, a Japanese Christian of some means, settled in a tough community. The boys and girls made life miserable for her. So the old woman experimented with Christ's plan of returning good for evil. She built a swing for the children in her own yard and invited the vagrants into her home for sport and amusement. Soon after this earnest Japanese started a little Bible school in her own house. It has grown so that Miss Rioch has been called to guide the work. The Bible school of 100 still meets in the old lady's home, composed of her former tormenters.

Gentle reader, if you were here this afternoon we would take you with us and A. W. Place and wife to a banquet that a former Buddhist priest has arranged for us. He is the first joy and reward of our labors years ago. To-morrow our missionaries in Tokyo meet together to break the loaf and greet the McCalls who have just come to reinforce us from America. As I sit here in my study by the open window I can hear the summer birds and insects singing. The sun has not set yet, the evening's dampness has gathered on the lawn. Flower and trees that I planted there years ago are blooming. The palms and bananas have spread to fine proportions. We are safe in Japan again. I hear the voices of all my children at play. Kind faces, earnest faces who wished us well in the dear home land come crowding into the vision. And so you understand why one missionary's heart bounds with joy and offers grateful praises to the Father of earth and sky, of life and thought, for the unthinkable fulness of grace revealed in Jesus.

Northeast Pennsylvania.

There are fifteen churches in northeastern Pennsylvania, ministered to at the present time by seven ministers. W. I. Burrell preaches for the churches at Benton, Stillwater and Cambra, G. C. Zeigler for Berwick and Bloomsburg, George Youlls for Huntsville, L. O. Knipp for Plymouth, C. A. Frick for Westmoor, R. Bagby for the Dunmore church, Scranton, and E. E. Manley for the Providence church, Scranton. The church at Sweet Valley has been without a minister since W. H. Weisheitt left to take up the work at the Calvary church, Pittsburg. A good man is needed for that field. The churches at Millville, Lungerville, Derrs and Rohrsburg are without a minister since James Kerfoot resigned to go to college. The church at Wilkes-Barre is a mission, meeting in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, and is assisted by the American Chirstian Missionary Society and the Eastern Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society. E. E. Cowperthwaite has ministered to this church forcefully and faithfully for four or five years, but has resigned to take up other work, and the congregation, with the approval of the A. C. M. S. and the E. P. C. M. S., has called C. H. Frick, of Crafton, who will locate there as soon as he can arrange for a suitable man for Crafton. In the mean time the ministers in the vicinity will supply the pulpit. These ministers have organized a ministerial association which meets monthly in the Y. M. C. A. parlors in Wilkes-Barre, with L. O. Knipp as president and E. E. Manley, secretary and treasurer. At the last meeting the secretary was instructed to send notes to our papers.

Hamlin and Daugherty at Lake Charles, Louisiana.

Evangelist R. R. Hamlin, of Fort Worth, Tex., and his singer, Leonard Daugherty, of Louisville, Ky., closed a most successful meeting with the church here. For weeks the church had been at work preparing for the meeting. Twice a week during the four weeks of the meeting a neat four-page paper was published, which went into two thousand homes in the city, being distributed with the largest of the daily papers here. Every day each of the daily papers had a column account of the meeting. Announcements were painted on the sidewalks every other day, and blackboards and poster advertisements were liberally used. The crowds were the best ever had in this city by any evangelistic meeting and the interest never faltered. The church has had a rather checkered career and great results in additions were not expected; it was desired, rather, to strengthen our position in the city, and build up the membership spiritually. This was done, and over thirty men, women and children added to the church. Those who came into the church during this meeting were among the best people of the city and add greatly to our strength and influence. About seventeen came by primary obedience, some from the Baptists and some from other bodies. The church is left stronger in every way, and Brothers Hamlin and Daugherty won the love and gratitude of pastor and people by their splendid work. We wish to commend Brother Hamlin, too, as a man who is not afraid to undertake a difficult proposition. Every dollar of the expense was on hand before the meeting closed and a nice balance left in the treasury.

Michigan, Third District.

A convention of the Third District of the Michigan Christian Missionary Society, held at Wayland, was called to order by Pres. C. A. Preston, of Ionia. Addresses were given by pastors of the district, as follows: "The Church and Men," O. W. Winter, Belding; "Incidental Evangelism," E. E. Barnes, Grand Rapids; "A Plea for Enthusiasm," W. A. Bellamy, Grand Rapids; "The Country Church," J. W. Curch, Ballards. The addresses were suggestive and helpful.

Thursday afternoon was given over to the session of the C. W. B. M. The ladies who took part in the program were Mrs. Frank Pickett, Wayland; Mrs. B. C. Kimes, Grand Rapids; Miss Nanna Crozier, Ballards; Mrs. A. G. Markham, Ionia; Mrs. J. J. Terry, Wayland. The session was exceedingly interesting, inspiring and practical.

At the closing session of the convention the address on "The Work of the C. W. B. M.," by Miss Crozier, revealed a thorough knowledge of the organization, its purpose and activities, and was well received by the audience. The closing address was delivered by corresponding secretary F. P. Arthur, of Grand Rapids. With characteristic optimism and force he presented a splendid view of the attainments and aims of the Disciples of Christ. Mr. August Sooy was the enthusiastic convention chorister and Mrs. E. G. Campbell the efficient organist.

The Christian courtesy of the Congregationalist brethren in giving us the use of their church for the evening sessions is fully appreciated. Our house of worship could not be lighted because the plant of the electric lighting company was out of commission. The hospitality of the Wayland brethren will be long and delightfully remembered. Much credit is due pastor E. G. Campbell for his work of local preparation. The Wayland church is prospering under his leadership. Five hundred dollars has recently been spent in improving the property. The attendance at the convention was not large, but what was lacking on account of numbers was more than made up by the earnestness and enthusiasm of both speakers and hearers. Strong emphasis was placed on planning and accomplishing larger things during this Centennial year. Two conventions are to be held, one with the Lyon Street Church of Grand Rapids, March 30, 31, and April 1, 1909, the other with the Belding Church soon after the Centennial at Pittsburg. The officers for the year are G. Webster Moore, Ionia, pres.; W. Muir, Grand Rapids, vice-pres.; O. W. Winter, Belding, sec.; W. P. Workman, Grand Rapids, treas.

Notes from the Arkansas Traveler.

The Arkansas Traveler and his wife attended the national convention at New Orleans. Arkansas had, perhaps, more representatives present than any other state. Such a spirit as was evident in that splendid gathering of our brethren can not but help to inspire us all to undertake greater things. In this state we lack enthusiasm—what some people call "vision." An ardent desire to accomplish that which we see needs to be done for the extension of the Lord's kingdom is what is needed. This, I think, we have received, to some extent at least, at the recent convention.

If you have not sent in your offering for state work, do it now. There is no enterprise in all our great work so important as state missions. Strengthen our stakes at home, and the other problems will be solved.

We are praying for a great campaign this winter. Some splendid meetings are being held in different localities and preparations are being made for others. Percy G. Cross, who held a good meeting in Prescott, which resulted in 119 accessions to the church and a new building started, is with the church at Hot Springs. H. A. McCarty and daughter are in a meeting with the church at Clarendon. The corresponding secretary and wife are in a meeting at Arkadelphia. These brethren have been struggling along for twenty years, but recently the Church Extension board made it possible for them to buy the Baptist church, a commodious brick building in the center of the city, and the meeting is being held there. Great crowds are hearing the gospel each night, and several accessions have resulted. This is a college town. The Methodists and Baptists each have a well equipped institution and fine church property.

We are in need of some good preachers in this state—men who will work, and who will stay. None of the fields open can offer a living unless one is willing to work. Some are calling for preachers for all, or full time, and some for half time. If the right man comes and will take hold of the situation he can soon have a pleasant work in a delightful climate, and he will succeed. Applicants should send stamp for reply, and always send references.

"Billy" Sunday at Jacksonville.

Rev. W. A. Sunday ("Billy" Sunday) has closed his six weeks' campaign in Jacksonville, Ill., with the usual results of hundreds of church members quickened to a new life and thousands added to the saved. Gipsy Smith and others make a great mistake in attempting to accomplish great results in two weeks. Our meeting was held in a tabernacle seating 5,000 people. It was crowded nightly. The Central Christian Church will receive over 500 new members and all our churches adjacent to the city are holding meetings with additions nightly.

What about Sunday's work? Ask any pastor who has been with him in a great campaign. The answer, whether coming from Bloomington, Decatur, Charleston, Jacksonville or other places is of one accord. He is a great preacher, a mighty man of God, calling people to repentance. His work abides. The converts are determined, full of the Spirit and with good back bone. The church which cares for his converts in a sympathetic way will hold most of them. We make our Bible school the center of attraction for them. Sunday preaches the Word. He is fair to our people.

Let Spokane and Springfield line up for the conflict. The pastors in those cities should spend every spare moment in making ready for the meetings to be held in those cities. Our people here were on the firing line from the first. Forty per cent. of the converts in Jacksonville were men. Let those who rail at present-day evangelism take a vacation and be with "Billy" Sunday in a revival, and witness a Pentecost. A reasonable gospel is preached, and New Testament Christianity receives an impetus.

Six hundred at prayer-meeting last night. Our new converts subscribed $1,500 to current expenses, last Sunday. We look to the future with great hopes.

To Raise Cotner's Endowment.

We are in the midst of an effort to raise $100,000 endowment for Cotner University, and the prospect is very encouraging. The churches are responding splendidly. In ten days' active service in the field about $1,700 has been raised.

The churches in Nebraska in particular, and the country generally, would do well to consider the wisdom of investing some of their money in this work. I am much encouraged in my efforts by the consecration of faculty and student body. These noble people have for years struggled against untold odds They have sent into the field and into the avenues of life some of the best and most successful men and women living to-day. Last year the Rhodes scholarship was won by a student of this institution.

The moral atmosphere of Cotner is of the most elevating kind. Last year among the four hundred students that entered the school, 150 were outside the fold of Christ; but when the school year closed, 147 of the 150 had made the good confession and went back to their communities to live for Christ and the good old gospel.

It is a pleasure to represent an institution that is in the hands of men who are making it their life work to send into the pulpits of our land young men that will stand firm for the simple proclamation of the good news. All we ask is a careful investigation of the value of this institution to the brotherhood, and after this investigation a hearty co-operation of every man and woman who desires to send out the "gospel light."

The University Church, under the able leadership of H. O. Prichard, is doing a great work. These people are making themselves felt for God in Nebraska, and possessed as they are of such an able and wise leader as Brother Prichard, I predict wonderful things for this church in the future.

India Notes.

The last mail brings a batch of papers and letters from India containing several news items of general interest. First in regard to the missionaries themselves: Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Cunningham, of Hurda, are rejoicing in the birth of a daughter, who came to them about the middle of September. At last reports the mother and daughter were doing well. Mrs. Bessie Farrar Madsen has been ill for some time in Mussoorie, but is now in a better state of health. During her most severe illness her children were taken care of by Mrs. Drummond and Mrs. Rioch, who were also spending some time at the hills.

C. E. Benlehr has had a hard year's work at Damoh—in fact, he has known little but hard work since he came to India. He managed to get away at the close of the rains for a short vacation to Poona, in the Mahrattha country, in the midst of pleasant climate and sedition. David Rioch has also had a very hard year's work in Mungeli. This is the station where E. M. Gordon labored for so many years. There are a number of Christians in the town itself and in the outstations and a great many different kinds of work to be looked after. The work there this year has been particularly trying. He has just been able to get away for a short vacation at the hills. Dr. Miller had charge of the station during his absence.

There is still some unrest in India, but the government is now going to work in earnest to restore things to their normal condition. The unrest is largely caused by the machinations of unscrupulous politicians, who want a chance to get at the public funds, and is assisted by the race antipathy which is inherent in the Hindu, as it is in every other people. In such cases the rough and criminal element always takes advantage of its opportunity, and there are stories, only too true, of occasional murders of Europeans. One particularly atrocious case was that of a young woman on her way to one of the seaports to be married. During the night some one entered her compartment and murdered her. The compartments of an Indian train are so arranged that one can not communicate with the guard or obtain assistance under any circumstances. Another instance occurred in south India. Two ladies connected with one of the hospitals were out for a walk at some distance from the European section when a ruffian or two set upon them and beat them. Some others came to their assistance and they escaped.

Several editors of seditious papers have been tried under the ordinary laws of the land, the usual charge being that of arousing or trying to arouse hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects. More severe punishment is being meted out now than formerly, and several have been sentenced to several years' imprisonment. The most noted of these was Bal Gangadhar Tilak, a talented but unscrupulous Mahratha, who has already served one term in jail. His friends persuaded a number of ignorant mill hands to go on strike in Bombay, and there was some rioting; but this was soon quelled, and things soon returned to normal, but several people were killed in the riots, by the firing of the police to drive away the mobs.

This year India has had abundant rains, and there is now no danger of famine. Of course many people were impoverished last year, and there is bound to be scarcity until the new crops come on. But rice is now about ready to come to the market, and there is work for all who want it, so that the econonomic condition of the country is much improved.

The Bible College in Jubbulpore reports the largest enrollment it has ever had. There are 23 young men and 19 young women studying, making a total of 42. Those who graduated last year and are now at work are doing well. We hope that in a few years their labors may result in a large ingathering into the Kingdom.

From all over the field come the most encouraging reports in regard to the work. There have been two baptisms at Deoghar lately. Several people at Bilaspur are said to be ready. The schools in Hurda are overcrowded. The medical work in Hurda is in a most flourishing condition. Let us pray that the year may be a most fruitful one.

Our New Church in New Jersey.

One of the most important events to occur in our brotherhood in the East was the dedication, on November 29, of the new edifice of the church in East Orange, New Jersey.

The two largest cities, Newark and Jersey City, in the United States that are without churches of our faith are located in New Jersey; and the only organized church we have in the entire state is the one at East Orange. Hence the growth in that state is largely dependent upon their work; and the influence of their success is of vital importance to our entire work in the East.

In the summer of 1899 Disciples from England, Virginia, Missouri, Iowa, Kentucky and New York State, who had moved to New Jersey, were brought together for a conference. They decided that if twelve could be found who would work and contribute it would be wise to undertake the laying of a foundation for a future church. After months of hard effort the required number agreed to undertake the work, and accordingly these twelve on the first Lord's day in 1900 came together to break bread. A midweek prayer service and Bible school, with only one child, was also begun.

From the very first emphasis was placed on missions, and that first year's contributions were made for home and foreign missions, church extension, ministerial relief, and the American Bible Society In October the Home Board came to their aid and made a pastor possible, R. P. Shepherd, now of California, being called. For a long time the meetings were held in a plumbing shop, and growth was slow. People had never heard of us, and we were taken for Mormons, Quakers, Christian Scientists, etc. In the fall of 1901 the Extension Board bought a lot and a chapel was built and dedicated in May, 1902. At this time there were about sixty members. In January, 1904, Mr. Shepherd was succeeded by Minor Lee Bates as pastor. During his ministry the church prospered and obtained a very high standing in the community. In 1906 he resigned to take charge of the 56th Street Church in New York City, and L. N. D. Wells, of Pittsburg, was called. The growth has been steady and substantial, until to-day the church has a membership of 250, with a Bible school attendance of 300. For some time no efforts have been made to increase the school because of lack of room. It has been meeting in two sessions, and the indications are that the school will reach 500 inside of a year, after getting into the new building, when room and proper facilities will be available.

The new building consists of a large auditorium with bowled floor, in combination with a modern Sunday school room. Each part is perfect in itself, and forms a perfect whole when used in combination. The building will accommodate about 600 in pews of auditorium, and a Sunday school of 700 or more, and providing advantageous seats when in combination for 1200 to 1400, all within easy seeing and hearing distance of the speaker. The windows are of handsome stained glass. The building is perfectly lighted, one of the features being a handsome dome covering the auditorium, throwing in a flood of mellow light. Back of the pulpit opens a baptistry, so arranged that while the central feature of the chancel is entirely out of the way, yet when in use it is visible from every part of either room. There is also provided a mother's retiring room, choir room, pastor's study, robing rooms, class rooms, etc., all in proper connection. The basement is entirely finished and equipped for all the social work of the church, with rooms adapted to physical exercise, club work, etc., as well as complete culinary and toilet conveniences.

The church is built of white brick, lime stone trimmings, red tile roof of Spanish pattern, and in design is of the modern or Americanized Romanesque style. The church is of the domical type, pyramidal in its grouping and has neither tower nor spire. The principal entrance is at the corner, through an imposing porch, with other conveniently located entrances to the various parts. This building complete represents a total cost of about $40,000, exclusive of lot, is located on the principal avenue of the Oranges, that noted residential suburb of New York, and is in the center of a population of half a million.

Ohio.

The Ohio man recently made a little lecturing tour in N. W. Ohio. The first stop was with the East Toledo church, where F. M. Pitman ministers. Brother Pitman has been with this church only four months but has led in givisg the building a new coat of paint, laid cement walks thereabout, revarnished much of the interior, and now a meeting of days is on, with F. A. Wight as evangelist. The congregation means to pay off all indebtedness this year. It was learned in Toledo that A. C. Finch has resigned at Norwood avenue.—A stop of one night at Mungen found a splendid lot of people in the best country church we have in Ohio. D. W. Miller is bishop and has a place many another preacher might well covet. A meeting by home forces began November 15.—At Fostoria V. G. Hostetter is busy conserving the force added by the Yeuell meeting. There is a good building with no debt and some heroic souls in Fostoria. The outlook was never so bright.—Many will be grieved to know of the death of Miss Loa Cook, daughter of Dr. S. M. Cook, of Weston. She was a graduate of Hiram and widely and well known. After two years of hopeless suffering she went home November 2. President Bates officiated at the funeral. The sympathy of all Ohio Disciples goes out to Brother Cook and family.—W. H. Boden, of Athens, and Scott Cook, of Nelsonville, will exchange meetings. The Athens meeting is on now. Miss Ida M. Hanna will sing for both meetings.—H. N. Allen has been called to give up his beloved wife. Sister Allen died in Ft. Wayne October 31 She was the mother of two preachers—E. W. Allen of Wichita, Kan., and B. H. Allen of Montesano, Wash. To the husband and sons our sympathies go out.—A. F. Stahl, of Akron, has been called by the church at Steubenville. He will go about January 1.—M. J. Grable is now in a meeting with his old flock at Salem. What a treat this will be to both congregation and evangelist!—Geo. F. Crites has moved his family from Barnesville to Hiram, and will continue evangelistic work.—The Anti-Saloon League promised half the counties of Ohio dry by Thanksgiving. The promise is already fulfilled, and a few more to hear from. By-the-way, V. G. Hostetter has the most appropriate way of keeping tab on the counties we have seen. He has a good, large map of Ohio in his study, and two rubber stamps. One is of a pump and water bucket; this is stamped on the dry counties. The other is a fat pig drinking at the swill trough; this is appropriately stamped on the counties voting wet. Only five have it so far.

C. A. Freer.

The Difference

The King James Bible was translated and revised in 1604-1611 and the language is the English of 300 years ago, containing many words and phrases not now in use, besides many words which have entirely changed in meaning during that period.

American Standard Bible

Edited by the American Revision Committee was translated and revised 1872-1901. The language is the English of the present day, which every child can understand, yet it preserves the excellencies of the previous translations. It is the latest and best version of the Scriptures because the American Committee had the benefit of the ancient manuscripts discovered since 1611 and had for reference the recent revisions by England, Germany, France, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Indianapolis, Nov. 25.—The revival meeting, which has been in progress at the Manhattan Christian Church for a week, closed last Lord's day evening. The church at Manhattan has not made any progress for some time and is a very hard field, but just closed a most successful meeting with G. A. Reinhardt and W. J. Evans, evangelists, of Indianapolis. Although there were only three came to Christ the good accomplished in this short meeting can not be estimated, for the community was stirred and the whole congregation has received a spiritual uplift.—Evans and Reinhardt, evangelists, 606 Fletcher avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

Columbus, Nov. 23.—The writer recently closed a short meeting here, at which place the church was reorganized and most of the debt paid off. In the near future we expect to begin a meeting here assisted by W. O. McKowan, of Marion, Ind.—Thomas Wallace.

Iowa.

Jefferson, Nov. 17.—I closed a three-weeks' meeting at Laurens last evening with 19 added—16 baptisms, two by statement and one by letter. The members of this church are a willing, educated and consecrated people, and should be doing a great work for the Master. We had four confessions the last evening and after the services the church gave a reception to the new members. This same evening I was presented with a beautiful card case and $20 as a token of their appreciation of my weak efforts to lead them in the little revival.—D. S. Thompson.

Erie, Nov. 25.—Our meeting continues. Three made the good confession last night. I. Stuart Miller, of Nebraska, is a forceful evangelist. The Methodist Episcopal and Congregational ministers are uniting their efforts and influence with ours to bring more souls to Christ. C. A. Polson, the pastor, is "all wool and a yard wide." Brother Elston, of Atlantic, Ia., was with us one night last week. I have a splendid and faithful chorus.—L. W. Ogle, singer.

Perry, Nov. 25.—At our evening service a week ago two young people confessed Jesus as their Saviour. The outlook for a successful winter campaign is good.—R. H. Ingram.

Chariton, Nov. 25.—The church in this city united with seven other churches in a union meeting. The results were very satisfactory for us. I have baptized 28, received four by statement and three by reclamation, making 32 in all. But the work is not ended. I know there are others who are expecting to obey the gospel as soon as they can, and others to unite with us in the good work. Our people are greatly encouraged. We have been with them just one year but will continue for an unlimited time. Chariton is redeeming herself nobly.—C. E. Wells, pastor.

Kansas.

Oakley, Nov. 23.—Closed meeting for Pastor Pingo and Grunnell Church with nine additions. Brother Pingo is a conscientious Christian man and will be with me in a meeting at Mento, beginning this week. We have no church at Mento, but hope to organize one.—R. W. Woodside.

Howard, Nov. 25.—Held a short meeting at Bethany, ten miles northwest of Howard, with nine baptisms and one by statement.—Gilbert Park.

Arkansas City, Nov. 23.—Just closed a short meeting here with twenty-four additions.—Thomas H. Popplewell.

Jewell, Nov. 20.—Closed a two-weeks' meeting at Star last Sunday with six added—all adults. F. E. Blanchard, of Smith Center, was the evangelist. The seed sown will go on bearing fruit. I will continue here another year.—James Cornish, pastor.

Chenev, Nov. 23.—Meeting growing in interest. Eighty-six added to date. H. J. Myers is the minister. I go to Osborne, Kan., next.—Edward Clutter, evangelist.

Oswego, Nov. 23.—O. H. Loomis, minister at Oswego, Kan., begins a special meeting with home forces Sunday, November 29, to continue for two or three weeks.

Greensburg, Nov. 22.—The meeting at Macksville up to Saturday had resulted in 17 additions—mostly baptisms. N. A. Stull is leading the forces there with rare ability. Began a meeting here yesterday with packed house and one addition. I expect Brother Stull this evening to lead the singing and personal work. Good outlook.—E. H. H. Gates, evangelist.

Beloit, Nov. 19.—Last Lord's day morning I baptized two girls from the Industrial school; at the evening service a man made confession and his wife came with him to take fellowship; this evening at prayer-meeting two young ladies made the confession. I will take the field as an evangelist and am open for engagements now.—W. H. Scrivner.

Moline, Nov. 23.—Seven added—four confessions first week, with home forces in very difficult field. One man 70 years old made the good confession Sunday night in the presence of many witnesses.—O. J. Law, minister.

Kentucky.

Lawrenceburg, Nov. 22.—We are still reaping the results of our meeting—five added in last two weeks, making 87 additions since October 1. Organized a men's class yesterday with 33 present.—Walter C. Gibbs.

Versailles, Nov. 19.—We are in the midst of a great meeting—22 confessions. B. H. Melton, of Richmond, Va., is preaching.—R. J. Bamber, pastor.

Massachusetts.

Everett, Nov. 24.—For three weeks R. W. Stevenson, of Toronto, Canada, has preached faithfully for the Hancock Street Church. Six were added to the congregation—three by faith and obedience, one from the Baptists and two from congregations of our own. Only those on the spot know the difficulties with which Brother Stevenson had to contend and the extent to which the church is indebted to him for his earnest efforts. It is only nine months ago that the former pastor left the church with a third of its members and more than half of its Sunday-school and erected a new church a stone's throw from the old one. For the moment the blow was crushing as the work of years seemed all lost. The members have bravely rallied, however, and the church is steadily regaining lost ground.—Donald C. McCallum.

[Such schismatic action as that mentioned above should be, and we understand is, wholly discountenanced by our New England Board of Missions, and by the brethren generally.—Editor.]

Michigan.

Allegan, Nov. 23.—We just closed a meeting here in this most conservative section of all Michigan, with 12 additions—one by statement, three reclaimed and eight by baptism. No special preparation and a country church were offset by two consecrated evangelists, Brother and Sister I. M. Ice. They captured the people with the simple gospel. We organized a Christian Endeavor society last evening and propose to devote the entire time for Christian Endeavor and preaching service on next Lord's day to the study of missions—both home and foreign. The Christian Endeavor and C. W. B. M. will have charge.—W. E. Wills, pastor.

Missouri.

Ash Grove, Nov. 25.—Held a two-weeks' meeting at Cross Timbers, with 15 added—10 confessions. I am devoting half time to evangelistic work in Bolivar district, and in the two months past have had 42 added. Brother Clark is the faithful pastor at Cross Timbers and is doing good work. I began a meeting here last Sunday with 11 added to date.—J. H. Jones.

Kirksville, Nov. 20.—We recently held a 20-days' meeting with the Plain View Church, six miles southeast of Atlanta, with 35 additions. This was one of the best meetings we ever held. We formed the acquaintance of T. C. Mauck, who has been their pastor for some time, and who is truly a man of God.—T. K. Glidewell.

Isadore, Nov. 16.—One addition here to-day by baptism. Six others previous to this one, and since my last report four by baptism, one reclaimed and one from the Baptists. Grand total seven.—Challie E. Graham.

Mayview and Corder, Nov. 22.—One confession last night at Mayview, one at Corder October 25, and one from another body November 15. The church at Corder was slightly damaged by fire October 4, but has been repaired and about $125 spent in additional improvements. The work at each place shows gain.—Arthur Downe.

St. Joseph, Nov. 17.—The King Hill Christian Church of St. Joseph has just closed a glorious meeting, resulting in 65 additions. The meeting was conducted by home forces. We expect to organize at once a large teacher training class, classes of 50 young men and 50 young women and other adult classes. I commenced a meeting with T. H. Capp in the northern part of the city last night. There have been 100 accessions to the King Hill church since I took the work six months ago.—J. T. Shreve.

Bethany, Nov. 23.—We are having a good meeting here—five accessions so far. Andrew P. Johnson, the minister, is an eloquent preacher and a thorough Bible student. I will assist in a union meeting at Palmyra, Ill., in December and will be with V. M. Elston at Atlantic, Ia., in January. My new permanent address is Ruskin, Neb.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Mexico, Nov. 22.—Our revival meeting is two weeks old—22 additions. Our pastor, W. M. White, is doing the preaching.—T. W. Dry.

Smithton, Nov. 25.—Two by confession at Tipton Sunday at regular service.—A. Sterling.

Savannah, Nov. 23.—Am having one of the finest meetings in the history of this church. The Sunday-school jumped from seventy odd at the beginning of the meeting to 121 yesterday—still having additions. Expect to close Wednes-

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

THE RELATION OF FAITH AND CHARACTER.

Topic, Dec. 9, Rom. 4:3; 5:1; Eph. 2:8.

First of all there must be the recognition of the great fact of salvation by grace through faith. There is no other way. Men have tried and failed. "By the law shall no man be justified." It is Paul's satement of the experience of the race, and of his own profound experience as a Pharisee, after the straightest sect of the Jews. Men cannot be made righteous by legislation. Even what we call common morality must have a higher motive than any legal statute. The righteous shall live by faith. The old prophet of the Hebrews spoke out of the deepest experiences of his own and his people's bitter bondage and crushing captivity. Every man in all this world who has succeeded in living above his age and above the sins of his generation has lived by the faith of God's ancient seers and servants. "For the life that we now live we live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us and gave himself for us." This is the way of all triumphant life.

We need in this hurrying, changing age, to learn again the old deep meaning of the divine declaration of prophets and apostles regarding justification by faith. It was the doctrine that wrought mightily under Luther for the Reformation of the Sixteenth century. It is not less the need of this Twentieth century. For men to-day are crying peace, peace, when there is no peace. Restlessness, physical, mental and spiritual, is a characteristic of our age. We need to hear and to heed the divine declaration: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God."

The divorcing of faith from character in the problem of Christian living has been the source of confusion and controversy in all the ages since Paul lived and wrote and wrought such miracles of might through faith in the Lord whom he served with such consuming zeal. Men have always been disposed to swing to extremes of legalism on the one hand or of fanaticism on the other. Salvation by faith apart from works—the works of the law—does not mean salvation without character. We are created in Christ Jesus unto good works, the great Apostle affirms. The "works of the law" are entirely different from the "good works" of the Gospel. Good works accompany salvation. We are saved to serve. This is the heart of the Gospel. Faith without works is dead, even as the body without the spirit is dead. Abraham was justified by faith, as we all must be if we are ever justified at all. But works wrought with his faith and by works was his faith made perfect. The value of works is not in themselves, so far as our salvation is concerned; for salvation is the gift of God. It is of grace; but works serve to perfect our own faith and thus enable us to appropriate the gifts of God. Moreover, he has made us to be co-workers with himself in our own redemption and in the redemption of the world, and all for our own enrichment and the enrichment of those who with us become fellow heirs of the heavenly inheritance. The great purpose of our redemption is that we may be built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit. Saved and sanctified individuals, a saved and glorified church in order to a redeemed and glorified humanity is the divine ideal; and this can only be accomplished as we co-operate in every way with God and all good men everywhere, in all good works, remembering always that circumcision nor uncircumcision, nor any form nor ceremony, of itself, availeth anything, "but faith working through love."

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Berean Bible Class (Ninth Street), Washington, D. C.

The first event in the life of the class was the conception of those who organized it. In December, 1900, ten men came together, and after a few conferences came to the following conclusions: The church needs a closer organization of the men; the Sunday-school is the best place to unite them; the men's Bible class every Sunday morning is the best thing to keep the men together; and that the men needed it as much as the church and Sunday-school.

The class was started by uniting some of the small classes of young men 18 years old and over, and in January, 1901, it began regular meetings with about fifteen members. The first officers were E. A. Stevens, teacher; T. R. Pirtle, president, and Harry Brewood, treasurer. Three committees were formed—membership, social and employment. Mr. Stevens gave the class a name, saying: "If we are going to be Bible students, we are Bereans." Acts 17:11.

From the beginning there were several things that were pushed and are still pushed, as they are essential to the life of the class. Attendance to the Sunday morning lesson first; that we hold at least ten in the class to hold it up; that we never "quit a man," that is, never take his name off the list and try to keep in touch with him, no matter how low he falls or where he goes, hence our motto: "Once a Berean, Always a Berean."

The class has a button, have had special sermons with Berean choir, songs have been dedicated to the class, an annual banquet is a good feature and has helped much, always bringing in a few more good men, the class picture has been taken, which gives a better chance for the men to get acquainted; but the real things that build the class are a good teacher, a wholesome atmosphere, and treating the men all on the level, as these give permanent results. We have used class cards as much as possible, and also written class telegrams, which were delivered by a class of small boys on Saturday evening.

The class has helped the church and Sunday-school as much as possible, and raised a sum of money to help young men start in the ministry. Some three or four men have taken up the ministry.

The average attendance for the first six years was about twenty-five, but with an affiliated list much larger. When Mr. G. A. Miller came to us as pastor these men were put in his charge as teacher, that he might be in close touch with a great force in the church and that they might be in touch with a man who would have a strong influence on their lives. The class has doubled in average attendance, as for the last year it was fifty-two.

About 500 men have been connected with the class in the seven years, but as Washington is a transient city, the members are not permanent. However, they have carried the ideas received and planted several men's classes, and we know of others to be started soon with the Berean principles. Our Lutheran brethren, one-half block away, asked our plans and started a class, which has grown in a few months to over 60 men.

The personal work should not be left out, as much of the success of the class is due to personal work. Some of the most encouraging things of the class are shown by some men who were prevailed on for three or four years to join the class, but now double the effort would not detach them. The "vestibule calls" have proved a success. Men go out two and two with lists on Saturday evening, but do not go in the houses, making a large number of calls in the one evening.

The class is growing fast and the interest in the regular members is increasing week by week, some claiming that they have received more information about the Bible in the last year than they did in their entire lives up to that time.

Many of the best things of the class can not be written, as they were personal, and many good deeds are done in the name of the class, the church, or Christianity, without the left hand knowing it, and still the opportunity would never have presented itself but for the Berean class. T. R. Pirtle.

Ohio's Aims.

We have started in the State Bible work in Ohio in the full determination of aiding our schools, as a whole, to come to a fuller realization of their strength and power.

This is no small work and can be accomplished only through the co-operation of our Bible school workers.

We have a few aims that we ought to be able to realize during this Centennial year. We are hoping to hold to the advantage already gained in the teacher-training work and to add to the same by securing the establishing of a training class in every school where one is not already organized. It seems to me that we ought not be required to more than call attention to this great work in order to have it taken up by every school thus far so unfortunate as not to have a class.

Next, we hope to have our Adult Classes organized and certificated by the State

Sunday-school Association. As a Centennial Aim, the Christian Church at large is striving for the organization of 10,000 classes with 100,000 men and 100,000 women enrolled. Ohio's portion is 1,000 classes and 10,000 men and 10,000 women. May we not through the columns of the Christian-Evangelist appeal to all our Sunday-school workers to aid us in the realization of this worthy endeavor? It is not an extreme undertaking. When we think it over it really begins to look small. We want to appeal to every person interested in the Bible school to urge the matter of organizing to report the same to the writer.

The unorganized adult class is a rich field, and a difficult one—for the teachers to work; but when organized it becomes a force going out into the larger field—the world—bringing others into the class and through this means enlisting them in the church work.

In the organization of these classes do not lose sight of the fact that classes must be registered with the Ohio S. S. Association, 79 The Ruggery, Columbus, O. Just in this connection we will say, too, that every teacher-training class should be registered with the same.

All Ohio readers are invited and requested to send names of all organized classes—number of men and women enrolled in same—all teacher training classes—number enrolled and teacher of the same—name and address of your Bible school superintendent and any other data you may believe to be of interest to

Yours sincerely

L. L. Faris, State Supt.

Others may have applied direct to Mr. Miller this week, but these applications came through our office.

November 7 Mr. George W. Miller, secretary, of Paris, Ill., writes: "Since September 30 I have been receiving very many more applications fom your churches than before September 30. There have more applications come in for October than all the rest of the year together. The work you are now doing is beginning to show decided results in the new applications that are being received from the Christian Sunday-schools. Keep up the agitation and the results will follow.

The past ten days the number of applicants from your churches are steadily increasing, and if they continue at the present rate you will soon be in the lead. At present the Methodists are first, the Presbyterians second, the United Presbyterians third, the Christian churches fourth."

It is encouraging to know our classes are responding to this work, but we have scores of them all over the state that are eligible and should apply for the I. S. S. A. certificate. Write Mr. Miller at once and enclose the 25 cents. We lead in other lines in the general advance of Bible school work, and by a little effort can easily lead here. Right now is the time to do it.

A package of literature on the organized adult class can be had on application to this office. This explains in full the requirements for the international certificate of recognition, and how to proceed with the organization of the class. Remember to be counted in the present enrollment the class must have the certificate from the international association. Blank applications can be had on request from this office. We have the classes and all that is needed is to enroll in order for Illinois to lead in this movement. Write at once if you are not in line.

All teacher training classes in Illinois taking the final examinations since September 1, are requested to report to us at once. Owing to the stress of the work, Mrs. Northrup is unable to send these reports promptly, so I will greatly appreciate the favor if class leaders will report direct to me. We made a great record a year ago in enrolling these classes, which in itself was a great achievement, but a greater one is the finished class, which is the object sought. As these classes are now finishing the work in large numbers, we wish to make full reports as fast as possible, which will be even more inspiring that the enrollment reports were a year ago. Please send them at once.

Miss Alice Hornbeck, teacher training superintendent for Pike County, and Miss Sara Davis, of Pittsfield, have taken the first examinations on the advanced course. Can any other class report such progress in the advanced work?

Herbert A. Carpenter, White Hall, recently reported a class from Carrolton, which makes it unanimous in Green County, Ill.

A Word from the Coast.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

A lot of our younger preachers out here on the firing line, and also a lot of the older men, like E. W. Darst et al., heartily approve of your attitude on the Standard-Willett Centennial question. In fact, we approve of your manner of dealing with all the questions that arise from time to time in our theological atmosphere.

The thing that has amazed me is the apparent ignorance of some people on the religious thought in our large universities. I admire and honor these brethren for their devotion and loyalty to what evidently seems to them the only way of settling these questions. But their blindness to the conditions now existing in all the larger institutions of learning in this country is sometimes remarkably funny. No matter whether the questions or conditions are right or wrong, it still remains a fact that they exist. And it is further evident that the students are living in and breathing this atmosphere all the time. We men near these educational institutions have to face the situation as it is, and have discovered, long ago, that we can not whip people into line a la Standard fashion. But many are the helpful thoughts we gather from your writings. So, with Carleton, I would say:

"You're doin' the politics bully, as all our family agree,
Just keep your old goose quill a-floppin', and give 'em a good one for me."

May the Lord grant you many more years of life and health. Chas. L. Beal.

COTTINGHAM.

Bertha Margaret Cottingham was born October 25, 1887, in Monroe county, Missouri, and died November 2, 1908, at Wray, Colo. She was one of the leading spirits in the church and Christian Endeavor and has been a teacher in our Sunday-school for a number of years. She was true and her life was pure and filled with good works. She was kindness itself. God only knows how we will miss her, yet her influence will go on for her "works will follow her." The tender heart that beat in unison with the best things of earth is pulseless and cold. The eyes that were windows to a soul of loftiest ideals are forever closed upon a world where they saw only beauty and truth. Upon the scroll of time her character spreads its white pages that all might read. As we bid her farewell the earth closes over one of whom may be said: "We shall hardly see her like again," but some day, some time, we shall understand.

She leaves five brothers and two sisters, father and mother, to mourn the loss of the one who was the idol of the home. She was ready and willing to go and so expressed herself a number of times. We shall hold sacred the memory of her beautiful life, her devotion to her church and her unfaltering faith in her Saviour. The services were conducted by the writer.

RICE.

After months of patient lingering between life and death, W. O. Rice passed beyond, Saturday morning, October 17. He had been a member of Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., since 1884. He left a wife, three children, Frank, Arthur and Mrs. Pearl Capps, to mourn his loss. Brother Rice was born in Templeton, Mass., August 3, 1838. He united with the church at Lost Creek, Ia., the first organization of the Disciples of Christ in Iowa. His fidelity to the church was an example. Quiet, unassuming, yet rugged in his convictions, he was ever at his place of duty. During his long illness he was the soul of resignation. None who visited him during the past months can ever forget his earnest messages. His soul was revealed to visitors as an open book and his faith grew lustrous through the discipline of suffering. We shall sorely miss him and yet he has left a rich lagacy to his family and his church in the hope he gave of the verity of God's promises. With Sister Rice and the sons and daughter the Central Church joins in loving sympathy. Brother Rice had for many years been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and his son informs us that during the last days of his sickness he took great pleasure in having some one one read from its pages. This is one indication of his interest in the things pertaining to the spirit.

ROTHENBURGER.

The sad death of Mrs. Kate Teachout Rothenburger has brought sorrow to the many whom she loved and who loved her. Mrs. Rothenburger was the only daughter of Albert R. and Sarah Parmly Teachout, of Cleveland, O. Reared in a Christian home, she accepted Christ early and grew up into a young womanhood of rare unselfishness and devotion. The gay world of society had no attractions for her. She attended Hiram College that she might have adequate mental training for Christian service. She attended the Boston Conservatory of Music that her gift of song might be fully utilized in her work for Christ. For some time she served the C. W. B. M. of Ohio as superintendent of young people's work. In 1906 she was married to W. F. Rothenburger, then of Chicago, now pastor of the Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland. As the wife of a devoted minister of the gospel she seemed to have found a field where, being always useful, she could be always happy. But the time was short and the shadows closed early. At the age of 27 she has left her work incomplete, to be finished, as we believe, where the limitations of his life are removed. When her litttle daughter learns of the mother she is now too young to miss, she will hear the story of a life lived altogether for others, and most of all for him whose she was and whom she served.

WOOD.

Luraney E. Ward was born in Vigo county, Indiana, July 25, 1840. She came with her parents to Montgomery county, Illinois, in 1857, and was united in marriage to LeRoy F. Wood, February 25, 1856. She became a Christian in her girlhood, probably in 1856; was baptized by her father, J. G. Ward, who was one of the pioneer preachers of Indiana and Illinois, having a wide circle of friends in both states, where, during the active work in the ministry, he had the reputation of being a forcible and logical minister of the gospel, leading many into the kingdom by his clear presentation of the precious truths of God's word. Sister Wood and her husband had been spending the day at the home of Brother and Sister Gambles, old friends of theirs, and, after the dinner hour and a short visit together, Brother Wood returned to his office in this city, leaving his wife to spend the afternoon with the Gamble family. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon Brother Gamble started to take her home in his buggy, and, on coming to the crossing near where he lived, they were struck by a passing street car, and both were instantly killed. The sad and untimely death of Sister Wood has cast sadness and gloom over the entire community. She was at her place in Sunday-school and church on the Sunday before, also at the Wednesday night prayer-meeting. She was a great worker in the church, seldom missing a service. She loved the pure and the good; was a devoted wife and mother, endearing herself to all who came in touch with her in her home and church work. The funeral service was conducted in the Christian Church, in the presence of about 3,000 people. Ben N. Mitchell, the pastor, spoke on the "Value of Christian Character," assisted by Brother Elam, her former pastor, who spoke feelingly and tenderly of her beautiful life. The grief was such that our splendid choir was unable to sing, and the Presbyterian choir kindly took its place. Sister Wood is survived by her husband, LeRoy F. Wood, five children, eight grandchildren, two brothers, one sister and a large circle of friends. A happy home is broken up, but in a little while the reunion will take place. My dear brother in the Lord, may our heavenly Father help you to say, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

Of the Father's Love Begotten.

He is here, whom seers in old time
Chanted of, while ages ran;
Whom the voices of the prophets
Promised since the world began;
Then foretold, now manifested,
To receive the praise of man,
Evermore and evermore!

Praise him, O ye heaven of heavens!
Praise him, angels in the height!
Every power and every virtue
Sing the praise of God aright!
Let no tongue of man be silent,
Let each heart and voice unite,
Evermore and evermore!

Thee let age and thee let manhood,
Thee let choirs of infants sing;
Thee the matrons and the virgins,
And the children answering;
Let their modest song re-echo,
And their hearts its praises bring,
Evermore and evermore!

Avoid Hurried Christmas Shopping.

"I've got to buy seventeen presents this afternoon. Don't you pity me?" This was the farewell of an anxious-looking girl who excused herself from the luncheon table before the dessert was brought in, and hurried off to her strenuous task. And those who sympathized with her the most could not help thinking that the recipients of those gifts, too, should come in for a share of their sympathy.

Seventeen presents bought in an afternoon means inconsiderate buying. It is impossible to discriminate, to take a friend's taste into account, to contiue one's search till one finds approximately what one is after, under such stress. Many a weary shopper comes home as Christmas time approaches with an uncomfortable sense that, out of the numerous gifts he has purchased, few fit the recipient.

The idea that Christmas shopping should be confined to December is one of the greatest possible mistakes. All through the year you could have been and should have been making your purchases. You could buy at your leisure, frequently at more moderate prices, and with a consideration of the requirements of each individual case impossible in the hurried shopping of the last few weeks preceding Christmas.—Young People's Weekly.

It might be of interest to the Sunday-school boys and girls to know that the costliest book in all the world is a copy of the Bible. It really is beyond price, for money could not buy it. This Bible is a Hebrew version now in the Vatican. As long ago as the year 1512 Pope Julius II. refused to part with it for its actual weight in gold.

Just Three Things.

I once met a thoughtful scholar, says Bishop Whipple, who told me that for years he had read every book he could which assailed the religion of Jesus Christ, and would have become an infidel, but for three things:

First, I am a man; I am going somewhere; to-night I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all such books can tell me; they shed not one solitary ray upon the darkness; they take away the only guide, and leave one stone blind.

Second, I had a mother; I saw her go down into the dark valley where I am going, and she leaned upon an unseen arm as a child goes to sleep on the breast of its mother. I know that was not a dream.

Third. I have three motherless children. They have no protector but myself. I would rather kill them than leave them in this sinful world if you blot out from it all the teachings of the gospel.

The Gossip Bridle.

An old English church, the parish church of Walton-on-Thames, preserves as one of its proudest possessions an authentic relic of mediaeval days, known as a "gossip bridle." The church at Hampstall, in Staffordshire, has another. At first sight, an American boy would take them for primitive baseball masks. They are made of thin bars of iron, and can be locked on the head. But the thing that distinguishes them from any baseball mask, and makes them "bridles," is a flat, leaf-shaped piece of iron so contrived as to enter the mouth, press down the tongue, and hold it motionless. The gossip bridles, in the days of their use, antiquarians tell us, were not for women alone. They came in two sizes, one for men and one for women. With the gossip bridle once locked on, the loudest tongue was silent, and the wearer well punished by the scorn of the parish.

The gossip bridle is now only a relic. But that does not mean that the sin it used to punish has passed away, too. The world is just as full of unkind words and slanderous whispers as in mediaeval days. Sins of the tongue are just as raging, and every bit as dangerous, as when St. James wrote that "the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity." The air is afloat every day with unkind sayings, and ugly suggestions, and scandalous reports, and mean insinuations, and thoughtless criticisms, and mockery, and accusations made in the heat of temper, and prejudiced repeating of things that are better left to silence, and all the other dangerous products of unbridled talk. The gossip may insist that he or she means no harm—but the harm is done exactly the same, and the responsibility remains exactly where it belongs and can not be evaded.

The Mantle of Charity.

It is the one garment the fashion of which never changes. The years may go and come, and yet she who cloaks herself in this mantle is at once happy herself and the giver of happiness. In cut it never changes. It is always large and full, so that it can develop those who are unhappy and give them warmth and comfort. Like the cloak worn by the prince in the fairy tale, it is invisible to all but those whose eyes are made clear by faith. It is the garment I would like my girls to wear. It is true that much patience and much self-denial are required before this cloak is put on, as it should be, for all time; but, once assumed, the amount of joy to be gotten from it and the happy heartbeats to the wearers of it, can not possibly be overestimated.—Ruth Ashmore.

How Far Light Shines.

Experiments in Germany, to find out how far light shines, showed that an incandescent light of one-candle power is plainly visible at one mile, and one of three-candle power at three miles. A ten-candle power light was seen with a binocular at four miles, one of twenty-nine at five miles, though faintly, and one of thirty-three at the same distance without difficulty.

It came upon the midnight clear
That glorious song of old
From angels bending near the earth
To touch their harps of gold
Peace on the earth good will to men
From heaven's all-gracious King
The world in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing.

There is always room at the top but some people demand an elevator to carry them there.

A True Story of a Strange Awakening

By Lora S. Lawrence.

John Wilson was a young man of moral habits, but was not a Christian. He hired out for a year to a wealthy Iowa farmer, a Mr. George Hall. Wilson liked his new home, and all went well until Sunday. After the morning chores were all done up, Mr. Hall came out with his fishing-pole and asked John if he would like to go fishing with him. Young Wilson was surprised beyond measure, but confusedly excused himself.

The day dragged slowly away. Mrs. Hall went visiting, and not a soul was on the place except Wilson. He saw at a little distance several of the neighboring farmers putting their fast nags through their paces, but all this was so repugnant to his training that he did not offer to join himself to them.

Mrs. Hall returned at 4 o'clock and rallied him upon his downcast looks. "I do believe you are homesick," said she.

"No. I am not homesick a bit," he replied, "but it has been the longest day that I ever saw—and it has been the dullest. How in the world do you stand it? Haven't you any church or Sunday-school to go ot?"

Mrs. Hall laughed heartily. "You didn't know you had come into heathendom, did you? Well, you have. I don't suppose there could be another such settlement found in the United States. There isn't a Christian man or woman in this entire school district, and only one, Uncle Jacob Straber, in the school district that joins us. We are not such a bad lot, either; but, of course, we don't go to church, and there isn't any to go to if we did want to. You will have to do like the rest of the men—go fishing, play baseball, or race horses on Sunday."

Wilson shook his head. "I'm no better than the rest of you, but I can't go back of mother's bringing up. It would break her heart if she heard of my doing such things; but what do you women do while the men play baseball and race horses? Looks like you would have a Sunday-school for the children, anyhow. Are you going to let them grow up without knowing anything about keeping the Lord's day?"

Mrs. Hall looked troubled. "I have thought of that lots of times—thought of it lots of times. There's my Hattie and Willie now, ten and eight years old, and they have never been inside of a church's walls more than two or three times in their lives, and never were at Sunday school. Mrs. Moore, Mrs. Tompkins and I have talked it over more than once; but we were all unconverted people, and so are our neighbors, and we don't see any way out of it."

Wilson's face flushed with a sudden inspiration. "There's enough of us right now that are tired of this kind of a Sunday to start a Sunday-school. Let's do it."

"What! Have a Sunday-school without any Christians for teachers?"

"Why not? It won't make us any worse to study the Bible, will it? and, if we haven't any Christians to teach us, some of the rest of us will have to volunteer, that's all."

Mrs. Hall thought a moment. She had been a school teacher in her girlhood, and was a refined and educated woman. Memory brought back to her the days when she was as regular in attendance upon church and Sunday school as Sunday was coming. True, she had missed becoming a Christian, but she knew in her heart that she was far less worldly in those days, far nearer the kingdom, than now. Her conscience troubled her.

"If it wasn't for one thing," she said, slowly, "I'd fall right in with your plan."

"What is that?" asked Wilson, getting full of interest.

"There's no one to pray. I would not have a Sunday-school that did not open with prayer—we might as well be pagans and be done with it. I don't believe in making a mockery of sacred things, and there isn't any one to offer a prayer."

It was John's turn to think a moment. Then he slapped his knee as a bright thought struck him. "Say the Lord's prayer in concert. There is nothing wrong in that, and it will be the best prayer ever made, besides."

Mrs. Hall agreed to that. Mr. Hall came home just then, and rather to his hired man's surprise fell right in with the Sunday-school project.

"You get into the carriage," said he to his wife, "and ride around the neighborhood. Tell every woman you see that we will meet at the schoolhouse at 2 o'clock next Sunday to organize a Sunday-school. John, you tell all the boys about it, and I'll talk to the men. Look in your trunk, John, and see if you can find any Sunday-school quarterly."

By 2 o'clock the next Sunday the lane and inclosure about the schoolhouse was full of buggies and wagons. The schoolhouse was so full that no more could crowd into it and seventy-five persons were around the steps and entrance.

George Hall acted as chairman. The organization was effected out of doors, as it was impossible for the crowd to all get inside of the school building. Nothing could have gone off with more enthusiasm. Apparently everybody wanted that Sunday-school. Mrs. Hall was chosen superintendent. Mr. Hall, as he had hoped, was given the Bible class, which in this case embraced all the hard-headed arguers of the neighborhood. John Wilson was given the class of young men. Half a dozen other teachers were given classes, and a full complement of modern Sunday-school helps were ordered to be purchased.

The school went on as it had begun. Rain or shine, there was a tremendous attendance and everybody was interested. Bibles were hunted up and studied from cover to cover, particularly in the Bible class, which became famed far and near for the absorbing interest its members had in it.

Six months after this Sunday-school started, an invitation was received from the adjoining school district to come over the next Sunday and help them to organize a Sunday-school there. This was the district that Mrs. Hall had told John Wilson about, that contained one solitary Christian. The invitation was accepted, and the Sunday-school inaugurated with similar fashion to the first. For this one Sunday the two schools met together, and for the first time the Lord's prayer was not used in the opening service. Old Uncle Jacob Straber poured out a most fervent prayer, and one that sunk deep into every listener's heart. In this particular he prayed that this might lead to a minister of God being sent among them to preach for them.

Going home, this was discussed. "Why not?" said one, and "Why not?" echoed his neighbors. Mrs. Hall was finally directed to see if a minister could be found to preach, first one Sunday at one church, then the next Sunday at the other.

After a time she found the minister, the Rev. Mr. Perkins, a godly man and a wise one. To him it was a marvelous story. He came first to the Hall school house, and to every one's surprise announced that he would begin then and there a revival service. To him it was a parallel case to that of Cornelius sending for Peter, and he believed the time ripe, whether they realized it or not for this people to turn to God and his righteousness.

The time was ripe. In a few days sixty men and women were converted in that one neighborhood, and a second revival followed in the next district, where the second Sunday-school had been started. Now mark the marvelous operation of God's Spirit. Every officer of the Hall Sunday-school and almost every member of its Bible class was converted. John Wilson was made deacon. Subscriptions were at once made toward a church, work began on it as soon as spring opened, and in one year after that Sunday-school was begun in a godless neighborhood, there was a neat church, regular preaching, and a strong country church membership established. God will not be without a witness.

THE MOTHER HEART

By E. M. Barrie.

"I wish—I wish—oh, I do not know what I wish—only I am so tired of things as they are—so very tired!" She stopped, threw out her arms with a gesture of infinite weariness, then let them fall limply on the arms of her chair. It was Christmas Eve. Outside, thin soft snow was drifting against the window-panes. Inside, the shadows crept about the room, playing at hide-and-seek with the dancing firelight. Time passed, the fire sank to a dull glow, the shadows trooped together and massed themselves to a dense blackness. The woman in the chair by the fireside sat silent, motionless, save for the clenching and unclenching of the slim hands, which glimmered rosily in the glow of the dying fire. A man's step sounded in the hall outside; a firm hand turned the handle of the door, and a deep, quiet voice asked:

"Are you there, Dorothy?"

"Yes, Alec," the reply came quietly, carelessly even, from the chair by the fire; but if there had been light to show it, an observer would have been struck by the sudden tension in the hitherto listless figure of the woman who sat there. Her husband crossed the room and roused the fire to a brighter blaze before he spoke again. Before Dorothy had time to retreat further into the shadows the blaze revealed a pale, small face, proud and cold, though the corners of the lips drooped pitifully now. Her husband's keen grey eyes missed no item of her appearance. His voice, when he next spoke, was very gentle.

"I am sorry that you are so disappointed about to-morrow night, Dorothy. If it were an engagement of any other kind, I would try to get out of it; but this Christmas tree is my treat to the mission children, and I simply must be present."

"Oh, yes, I understand! Do not trouble to explain, Alec. We had not been married six months before I knew that this mission was the thing which lay nearest your heart. I can not enter into competition with your slum friends."

"You are unfair, Dorothy, as you have been all along. I can not understand why you are so warped on this subject. Suppose I spent my free time on golf or bridge or any other idle amusement, would you be better pleased than to see me trying to do some good to my fellow creatures? Dorothy, why will you not do as I have so often begged you to do? Come down to the mission with me and see the work we are doing. Then you will understand. Dorothy, come with me!"

He bent down and caught her two hands masterfully in his. Fierce war raged in Dorothy's bosom. With all her heart she longed to submit to the passionate urging of the deep voice beside her; but the specter of division that had stood between them for a whole long year was not to be laid even yet.

"No!" she cried stormily. "No, I will not!"

Her husband held her hands a moment longer before he let them fall.

"All right," he said, and his voice was quite level. "I will not bother you about it again. Now I must be off. Expect me at home at 4:30 to-morrow."

The door closed quietly behind him. Four-thirty on the morrow did not, however, see Alec Thorburn home again. For two hours his wife waited in tense anxiety. From the fireplace she wandered to the window, through which she could dimly discern the swirling snow. From the window she passed to the door, where she listened and longed for the sound of her husband's voice. A maid brought in a telegram: "Snowed up Barnsley. Telephone Grace to manage Mission tree," so Alec Thorburn wired. His wife laid the ugly yellow envelope to her cheek. Her lips were tender, her eyes soft. How frightened she had been! How good it would be to see him safe at home again! She re-read the telegram and started for the door. Half-way across the room she halted to fight a last battle with her less noble self. Then her head went up. Her eyes were radiant, excited, yet half afraid. She rang the bell.

"Tell Williams that I want the carriage in half an hour to go down to the Mission Hall," she ordered; "and let dinner be served at once."

All this Christmas day had Alec Thorburn battled with deep depression. His heart yearned after the wife who refused to share his interest in the mission, who resented his love of the work, who for months past had shut him out more and more from her own heart, her own life, her own interests. Wearied, chilled, and dispirited he came late in the evening to the Mission Hall in one of the poorest quarters of the city. Snow was still falling and doing its best to disguise all that was hideous in the narrow, gray lanes and streets. From the open door of the Mission Hall a broad stream of light fell redly on the snow, and out with it into the night came bursts of childish laughter and the continuous ripple of childish voices. There was noise enough to cover the sound made by Alec Thorburn's feet on the bare floor, and he paused in the doorway of the hall to survey the scene. Over the crowd of children his eye swept to the giant Christmas tree, long ago despoiled of its wonder-fruits. Suddenly it was as if a great light had flared up in the hall, and even followed by a great darkness, out of which one single face—the face of his wife—alone stood out clearly. On the steps of the platform below the great tree sat Dorothy. All about her were children. One tiny creature was in the act of struggling to his feet, holding firmly to her arm the while; another lay fast asleep, nestled in the soft folds of her gown. She held a ragged mite to her bosom, and as she rocked it gently to and fro there was a light on her fair face which Alec had never seen there before. His intent gaze called to her as clearly as any words, and over the head of the baby the eyes of the husband and wife met. The lovely mother-look on his wife's face filled Alec with a wondering awe, and as Dorothy read the passionate gladness of his glance her heart was filled with humble thankfulness. In the carriage at last, alone in a world of snow, she was in her husband's arms.

"My darling, my wife," Alec whispered passionately, and Dorothy clung to him, crying:

"Oh, Alec, I can never forgive myself! Those poor little children! Oh, those poor little children!"

Later she told him:

"I was dreadfully frightened before your telegram came, Alec; and then I was so glad that I felt as if there had been an iron band round my heart and it had suddenly broken. Alec, when I took that little baby in my arms, something new seemed to come into my life."

Months later, when she laid his first-born son in her husband's arms, "Dearest," Dorothy whispered, "God waited until I found my mother-heart, and now he has given me my heart's desire."—British Weekly.

Was it You?

"Somebody did a golden deed;
Somebody proved a friend in need;
Somebody sang a beautiful song;
Somebody smiled the whole day long;
Somebody thought, 'Tis sweet to live.'
Somebody said, 'I'm glad to give;'
Somebody fought a valiant fight;
Somebody lived to shield the right;
Was it you?"

Suggestions for Christmas.

I keep a small stock of scribbling paper and a lead pencil in my work-basket, and each on a separate leaf, I write the names of the members of my immediate family and the near friends to whom I wish to send substantial gifts; following these I make a list of those to whom I would send simple remembrances. Whenever anything occurs to me as desirable for any one of these, I write it under the proper name. In this way I often accumulate impossible lists, but I buy, from time to time, as convenient, some listed article, and I never have to take time to think what is needed or appropriate. Then I always try to write some rhymes or jingles to give a touch of personality to each gift. For instance, to pair of gloves for a little son, this verse was attached:

"Christmas wishes go with one glove,
New Year's wishes with the other,
And they both are for my true love,
And the giver—why, 'tis mother."

To some handkerchiefs, this:

"When Santa Claus his pack did view,
He found these kerchiefs marked for you."

With a white silk muffler, went this motto:

"I know you have mufflers galore,
And by them you set little store:
But white is so very becoming—
In fact, makes you perfectly stunning—
That I venture to send you one more."

To half a dozen knit washcloths these verses were tied:

"Christmas gifts and Christmas wishes
Mind one oft of China dishes,
Fine to use at special function,
Locked up, then, by strict injunction.

"Common porcelain, I'm choosing—
Not too good for daily using,
When you bring them into action,
May you glow with satisfaction."

To a young mother, these verses went with a pretty knitted baby blanket:

"Cuddle ze babee,
Wrap 'im wi' care,
Dear 'ittle babee,
Face and hand bare.

"Ittle red babee,
'Sleep on your breast,
Knowing no evil,
Cared for and blest.

"Sweet 'ittle babee,
Sweet as can be,
Dear 'ittle babee,
Kiss 'im for me."

These will do for samples; the verses do not need to be profound, you see, merely personal and loving. To my other friends I send a visiting card with some personal inscription, even if it be only "Christmas wishes." I once wrote on a visiting card a few lines and sent them to a dear friend who has everything which money and social position can bring, and you can imagine my surprised satisfaction at her assurance that they gave her more pleasure than anything else which she received. Here they are:

"If this could be a daily greeting,
The whole year through, the whole year through,
Then o'er and o'er 'twould keep repeating,
'Dear, I love you; dear, I love you.'"

The verses are made just as the lists are, from time to time, as I sit sewing and let my thoughts dwell upon one or another friend; and they, too, are confided to the little stock of paper in my work basket, to be ready when wanted.

Poor Little Daisy

By Lulu C. Tulloch.

"How many days are there before Christmas, Mamie?" asked Mrs. Warren.

Her sister counted on her fingers and replied: "Eight."

"Only eight!" cried Mrs. Warren. "Dear, dear. And besides getting presents ready we must make that shopping trip to Philadelphia, and buy things for the new house. How inconvenient to move at this time of the year! But, as we are obliged to do so, there is no use to make a fuss about it."

Little Marguerite, usually called "Daisy," looked up from her play. She was a pretty child with large brown eyes, and although she almost never cried or whined, still she managed to have her own way in most things. Young as she was, she had found out that by an appealing look of those beautiful eyes she could get her mother and aunt to let her do whatever she wanted, even when they knew it was not always best to do so.

"Oh, are we going to Philadelphia?" she cried. "Goody! What shall I wear?" for hearing people speak of her pretty face had made her vain, and she thought much of her clothes.

"Why, you're not going," said her mother.

Daisy got up and went to her mother's side. "Not going?" she asked. "You told me I should go the very next time you and Aunt Mamie went."

"But, my dear, it is winter, and too cold for little girls."

"I can wear my furs."

"Aunt Mamie and I have so many errands to do you would get tired of waiting for us," continued mamma.

"I can rest on those nice little stools that turn round, while you look at things in the stores," persisted the child.

"I don't think it will be best for you to go, darling," said mamma, trying to be very firm.

"But you told me, mamma," insisted Daisy; "didn't she, Aunt Mamie?"

Under the gaze of those appealing brown eyes Aunt Mamie, who was also intending to be firm, wavered.

"Yes, sister, you certainly did tell her so," she said.

The imploring gaze was turned to her mother. "There, mamma and I do so want to see my grandmother. Poor little Daisy!"

This last phrase was one which the child used as a last resort whenever she wanted to work on people's feelings. During an attack of measles she gew so accustomed to being spoken of and to as "poor little Daisy," that when she was well she began to call herself so.

At first, when she was so small, it sounded very cunning, and every one laughed at her, but now she was getting to be six years old—old enough to use it to get her own way.

Her mother could not often resist it, and this time, when she heard it spoken in such a soft, entreating tone, she said, notwithstanding her determination to be firm: "Well, you may go, but we shall have to start very early, and you must not make a fuss about getting up."

Thus it was settled, although papa said, when he was told, that they were very foolish to take the child, the weather was so cold and she was sure to get tired.

"The poor darling wants to go so much," said mamma.

"Of course she does," returned papa, "and you and Aunt Mamie let her do just what she wants to do. What do you think she will be when she gets to be ten years old? She will be a perfect little tyrant, I can tell you that. Yes, I know she's a pretty child, and has a sweet, loving nature, but I'm thinking of the time when she gets to be a woman, and has to mingle with other people. She can't always have her own way then, and things will be pretty disagreeable for her if you don't teach her to give up a little while she is young."

"I know that all you say is true," agreed mamma, "and next time I will be very firm."

The weather was bitter cold the morning of the trip, but Daisy made no fuss when she was awakened so early that the gas had to be lighted to see to dress.

She helped all she could in putting on her clothes, aand after breakfast had been hastily eaten got her coat from the closet.

"Here's my coat, Aunt Mamie," she said; "will you please hold it for me?"

Aunt Mamie looked at the beautiful white garment in surprise.

"You're surely not going to wear your best coat?" she said.

"Of course I am," said Daisy.

"Oh, no," said her mother, turning from the glass where she was putting on her hat. "You must wear your red one."

"That's so old," objected Daisy.

"It is warmer than the white one," said mamma; "besides, it is more suitable to wear in the cars."

"But, mamma," returned the child, "the white one is so much prettier, and I should think you would want me to look nice when I go to see my grandmother."

By this time she had gotten herself into the white coat, put on a close fitting white hood trimmed with lace and fur, and with her white tippet and muff made such a pretty picture that her mother could not resist longer, and said, as Daisy knew she would: "Well, now that you have it on I suppose you'll have to wear it."

It was very early when they reached Philadelphia, and very cold. They went first to a decorator's to choose some wall paper, and Daisy found waiting very tiresome. The only amusement she could find was at a table in one corner of the store where a young lady was making Christmas articles out of crepe paper. Among them was a fanciful white fan which the child at once determined to have for her own.

She held it up to attract her mother's attention, and asked: "Won't you buy this fan for me, mamma?"

Her mother turned from the strips of wall paper which the clerk was displaying before her.

"A fan," she said, "what do you want with a fan this weather?"

"I want it. It's pretty."

"I don't think you had better have it. Don't tease. I'm busy."

"But, mamma, you promised you would buy me something for my very own, and poor little Daisy does so want this."

After a little more begging the child got the fan, as she knew she would, and, refusing to have it wrapped, walked triumphantly out of the store and along Chestnut street, waving it to and fro as if oppressed by heat.

Many turned to look at her, not only because they were astonished to see a fan used on such a cold day, but also for the reason that she made such a pretty picture, with her white clothes, dark eyes and soft curls peeping from under her hood.

After going into many stores Daisy found shopping very tiresome work, most of the revolving stools upon which she expected to rest being occupied by ladies, and soon she began to ask:

"Aren't you almost through, mamma? When are we going to grandmother's? I'm hungry." Her fan had ceased to please her, and would have been left behind several times if her aunt had not reminded her to take it.

At last, to her great relief and also that of her mother and aunt, who many times regretted that they had taken her, the last article on the long list had been bought, and they turned their weary steps toward grandmother's.

How glad they were to reach the shelter of the dear old lady's home! How loving was her welcome, how warm the good fire after having been out so long in the cold! How she kissed her "dear little Daisy," took off the child's overshoes and coat with tender hands, and placed her near the heater in a little chair that had been papa's in his boyhood.

After they had eaten a nice lunch and got thoroughly warm, the two ladies opened their bundles to show their purchases to grandmother.

"All the large parcels have been sent home in the cars," said mamma, "but these little ones we will take ourselves. How do you like these handkerchiefs? They are the best; here are collars and stockings and napkins; here's a centerpiece: isn't it pretty? And here are two towels I bought for you. I hope you will like them."

Daisy had been eagerly watching the opening of the bundles, and when grandmother had expressed her thanks for the towels, asked:

"Is that all, mamma?"

"Yes; I think so, dear."

The child put on her most appealing look, and said in an injured tone:

"All those things for you and Aunt Mamie and grandma, and nothing for poor little Daisy."

"Why, I bought you all sorts of things and sent them home," said her mother. "A new dress, raincoat, umbrella—don't you remember?"

"Oh, yes, those. But I haven't any little thing to take home with me."

"Where is your pretty white fan?" asked Aunt Mamie.

"A fan! This cold day!" cried Daisy, scornfully, forgetting how she had teased for the toy, which now, all crumpled and soiled, was thrown aside. "I want something I can carry home."

"Well, well dear, it is too bad. We must try to start early and buy something on the way to the station," said mamma.

Now grandmother was a wise old woman, who had brought up a large family of children, and knew all about the ways of little folks. She was not pleased to see how Daisy was allowed to have her own way in all things, fearing it would make her unhappy and disagreeable to others—in after years. So, not liking to find fault with the child's mother, she made a little plan of her own.

"Are you going to have a tree at Christmas, Daisy?" she asked.

"I don't know, grandmother," answered the child. "Am I, mamma?"

"No, dear, I do not believe I can arrange one," said mamma with regret. "I shall be so very busy with other things this year."

"But I want one," began Daisy.

Mamma must have been very tired with shopping for she spoke very decidedly: "I can not let you have one, I have said once. And don't say 'poor little Daisy' to me; you have said it often enough to day. You must break yourself of the habit."

"But, mamma——"

"How would you like to have a tree here?" asked grandma, interrupting before Daisy could say any more.

"We could not spare her from home," said mamma.

"I do not mean to have you spare her," said grandmother. "How will it do for you all to come over here that day, bring your presents and have a tree. In the evening you and John and Mamie can go home and leave Daisy to make me a visit while you are moving into the new house."

"Oh, mamma, do say yes!" begged Daisy. "I should so love to stay with my grandmother and have a tree."

So it was decided, but "poor little Daisy" did not know that grandmother had made up her mind that during the visit she would try by patient firmness to teach her dearly loved grandchild that she could not always have her own way.

Let us hope that she succeeded, for we all know how disagreeable such a child is to live with, even though she may be pretty to look upon and affectionate in disposition.

Santy Claus Talk.

BY GUY R. HLLL.

It ain't long till Santy Claus
  Makes his reg'lar visit now,
  Candies, nuts, and toys to give
To good little children, cause
I have noticed, ever' year,
When Thanksgivin' dinner's past,
  That the days go awful fast,
And that Christmas-time is near;
And when I lay down at night
For to dream in high delight
'Bout old Santy, I keep thinkin'
That I hear his sleigh-bells clinkin'.

Oh, the good, old Santy Claus!
  Wonder how he looks? I've heerd
  Mommy say he had long beard,
White as snow all round his jaws;
That his cheeks and nose were red;
And my mommy telled me, too,
"Santy only comes when you
Little saps are 'sleep in bed;
But he don't bring nothin' then,
Sich as toys and candy, when Little saps like you and Tommy Say bad words and sass their mommy."

Wonder how old Santy Claus,
  Where he lives away so far,
  Knows who all the children are?
Spec' he finds out by our pas—
He knows what we want, yes, sir,
  Santy does, and al'ays brings,
  Ever' Christmas, jes' the things
That the boys are lookin' fer;
And it's lots o' fun, you bet,
Christmas morning, jest to get
Out o' bed and be a-peepin'
Round when all the folks are sleepin'!

There's no man but Santy Claus
  Does the funny things he can;
  He must be a jolly man!
And he's curious, too, because!
He slips in and leaves our toys,
  Ever'thing so bright and new,
  Then he fills our stockings, too,
And skips out wivout no noise.
Mommy says that he can squeeze
Husself up jes' like he please,
So I reckon that old Santy
Can get down our chimney, can't he?

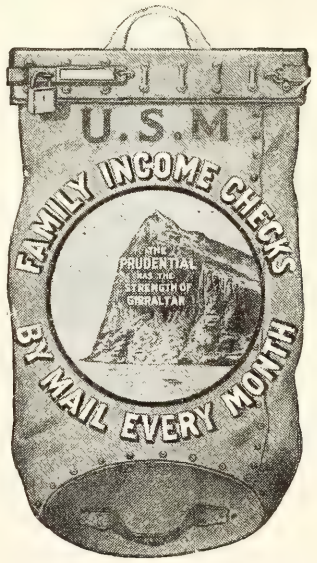
The Very Newest Idea in

PRUDENTIAL

Life Insurance



A Statement by the President:

THERE is no other business which bears so important a relation to the welfare of the family as that of Life Insurance. The Prudential's object is to provide for the men and women of the United States the most practical form of Life Insurance Protection—that which will contribute most completely to the welfare of those for whose benefit Life Insurance is taken.

With this sincere purpose in mind, The Prudential is issuing a Life Insurance Policy which, it is believed, meets more closely the necessities of the family—those who are left behind when the breadwinner dies—than any other form of Life Insurance before the American people to-day.

It is called the Monthly Income Policy, from the fact that the proceeds, instead of being payable in one sum, are paid to the family in a series of checks on the first of each month,—and continue for a period of 20 years or for the lifetime of the Beneficiary if it has been so selected.

The great advantages of this plan are apparent. Think of being able to leave your wife a Monthly Income,—a guaranteed sum which nothing can disturb—not affected by hard times, bad judgment in investments—which cannot be lost, depreciated or stolen—but which will come to her regularly every month for twenty years, or her lifetime,—thus enabling her to adjust the family expenditures, relieving her from all worry and putting poverty out of reach.

This is just what the New Monthly Income Policy accomplishes—it pays the rent, the household bills, provides food, clothing, education for the children—perpetuates your salary in fact—all by a monthly Income which cannot fail.

THE COST of this policy is low. For example, if you should be 30 years old you could, by paying The Prudential $167.35 per year (which means a saving of only $13.95 per month, or about $3.50 per week), assure to your family after your death—$50 Every Month for 20 years, or $12,000 in all! At slightly higher cost, you could make this Income payable to your wife or daughter for her entire lifetime. This is called the Whole Life Plan.

You can also arrange to confine all your payments to the Company to the first 20 years after taking out the Policy. This is called the 20 Payment Life Plan.

Now suppose you would like to arrange to protect your own old age—to assure yourself of an income which would start 20 years from to-day, if living, and last for 20 years longer, or—for you as long as you live and your wife as long as she lives if she survives you. This can be done too, under the Endowment Plan.

Suppose you and your wife were both 40 years of age: $214.20 per year (a saving of $4.12 weekly) paid to the Company for 20 years would provide a guaranteed Income of $25 per month, beginning at age 60 and continuing as long as either you or your wife should live,— and in any event for not less than 20 years.

Every rate and value in this Policy is absolutely guaranteed—in the Policy itself—while back of it are the great resources of the Prudential.

The success already attending this new Monthly Income Policy proves that it is striking the keynote of popular demand. You cannot afford to ignore a method of providing for your family or for your own old age a protection so sensible, so sure, so convenient, and so inexpensive. We wish to tell you what The Prudential can do for You in this matter. Write now while the subject is fresh in your mind. We will furnish you full Information—just adapted to Your particular case.

Remember, we believe this to be the greatest plan for the protection of your family ever devised—marking an epoch in Life Insurance. You should take advantage of it, for your family's sake. Write Now to

To Our Subscribers,

Dear Friends:—

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

Why not make your church or Bible-school a Christmas Present of new hymnals or song books?

We carry a full line of both, and would be pleased to send you catalogue and samples, if you contemplate purchasing at this time, or in the near future.

Perhaps one of the most appropriate Christmas presents you could possibly make to your church, would be a new INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE. These are beautiful, durable, and hygienic; they are being introduced rapidly in many of our best churches, also a very large number of our smaller rural churches are beginning to use them. We will send illustrated catalogue, on application.

We also carry a very complete line of Bibles and New Testaments, and they make most excellent and suitable Christmas presents to anybody, especially to a teacher in your Bible school.

Sincerely,
W. Daviess Pittman

Smoke and Health.

The Medical Fraternity is heartily supporting the active warfare that is now being waged against the smoke nuisance in cities and towns. One doctor has pointed out that sunlight and health are almost synonymous terms, and that the smoke not only obscures the rays of the sun, but generates noxious gases. He cites in proof of his contention the towns of Manchester and Leeds, England, with their notoriously high death rate. These are but two in many hundreds. Even in a city like St. Louis certain weather conditions make the smoke question one of great importance, and besides the question of vital statistics, much ruin of stocks of goods, etc. The agitation for smoke abatement can do nothing but good.

"Spirit-Fruit" Society.

Perhaps not one regular reader in a thousand of this paper has ever heard of a society whose headquarters have for some years been at Worcester Lake, near Engleside, Ill. Yet, at one time this religious sect numbered about 8,000, and was organized on the "community of goods" principle. Now that their leader, Jacob Beilhart, the founder of the movement, is dead, it is very doubtful whether the organization will hold together. The failure of many such movements begins with the death of the organizer. Who hears to-day of Dowieism? Perhaps there are many who still believe in its prophet, but the numbers are much fewer since the death of that leader. The "Spirit-Fruit" society claims to observe many of the New Testament principles as maintained by the Church of the Brethren, and lays especial stress upon the doctrine of non-resistance in its various phases.

Birth Decline.

Prof. Wilcox, of Cornell University, has been presenting some startling facts, showing a marked tendency towards a decline in the number of births throughout the civilized world, particularly among European stock. He bases his deductions on statistics which he claims are absolutely correct, and says that during the last fifty years there has been a gradual decrease in the proportion of children to each one thousand women of child-bearing age in this country. This falling off amounts to 152 in the time mentioned. "These figures indicate," the professor says, "that if changes like this which have been in progress in this country during the last half a century are to continue unchecked for a century and a half more, there will be no children left. This fall in the birth rate is due largely to the fact that human will and choice are controlling this matter in a sense and degree never before true."

The Best Reasons.

Has not Kansas some reasons for thanksgiving that are not shared by many of the other states? Governor Hoch, in his official proclamation, states some very pertinent reasons why Kansas should be thankful. "One-third of our counties are without prisoners in their jails or paupers in their poorhouses; one-half of our counties contributed no convicts to our prison population the last year, and one-half of our prison inmates never lived in Kansas long enough to gain a residence here. Our educational institutions were never so flourishing. Our churches were never so strong, nor the spiritual outlook more hopeful. The saloon has been practically banished from our state and its baneful influence almost entirely eliminated. All of these things should touch the chords of our better nature and make them vibrate with the reverent sentiment, 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow.'"

"Drive Out the Minister."

That's what the liquor dealers' club of Chicago thinks is the way to stop the liquor agitation. This is their declaration: "The key to the situation is to drive the ministers out of the fight. If the minister preaches prohibition in the pulpit; if women, as in Philadelphia, will march the streets with banners, singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers"—and it's a good march—there's no force can beat a fight like that. The question is not a moral one, although it has moral aspects, and no minister has a right to stand in his pulpit and preach it. If you are going to bump your head into prohibition it is going to win, but there are always ways of sidetracking public issues. The clergy is unable to distinguish between crime and sin." If the clergy is unable to distinguish between crime and sin, what shall be said of the liquor dealers? What kind of a world, indeed, would we have if the ministers were driven out? The liquor problem would be a very insignificant matter compared with the many evils that would crowd upon us. Just imagine the brewer succeeding in nailing up church doors or editing our sermons! Conditions are bad enough when some weak-kneed Christians try to stifle a godly minister's anathema, but imagine the condition of the world if all the proclaimers of righteousness were driven out of the fight!

International Thanksgiving.

Speaking of thanksgiving, why should there not be an international Thanksgiving Day? No other country than ours has a special day proclaimed by its chief officer, but there are countries that recognize more or less the good gifts from God. England has its "Harvest Home Festivals." A writer in one of our contemporaries presents reasons why the world powers might legitimately agree upon such a measure as an international Thanksgiving day. Such a celebration, he thinks, would conflict with no national religions and that Mohammedan and Jew, Brahman and Christian might join in the services according to their own individual rites and rituals in praising the Lord. This writer maintains that it would be the crowning act in the administration of our chief executive to invite other governments to agree on such a Thanksgiving day. The idea may seem Utopian at present, but so was any thought of a Federal Council of Churches of Christ even ten years ago. The world is moving, and the Christian forces are working.

South Dakota Divorces.

For some years past South Dakota has been the mecca of many dissatisfied people, with a desire to be relieved of matrimonial ties. Pilgrimages have been made from long distances by those who could not secure divorces in their own states, to take advantage of the laxity of the South Dakota law. But there will now be fewer of these pilgrimages, for there is a new divorce law in that state, and it is a notable improvement on the one now obliterated. No application for divorce will be considered henceforth unless there is proof of one year's residence in the state. A number of other requirements are, also, essential and, as divorce laws go, the new legislation of South Dakota may be fairly said to be reasonable.

Penny Postage.

Another step has been taken in bringing the world into closer communication. Since October it costs no more to send an ounce of first-class mail matter from St. Louis to London than it does across St. Louis. The letter postage rate has been lowered to two cents per ounce between America and England. It is predicted that the mails between the two countries will more than double as the result, so that there is not likely to be any particular loss in revenue. This has been a long time coming, and Mr. J. Henneker Heaton, of England, deserves, perhaps, most credit for it. Now some such system in the United States of parcels post such as the rest of the civilized world enjoys and a cheaper rate for ocean cables, is the next reformation that is needed.

A Great Historic Meeting.

These lines are written in the hubbub and hurry of the first meeting of the "Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America," in session in the city of Philadelphia. We have always been sanguine of the ultimate triumph of the cause of Christian union, but we had not hoped to live to see the Protestant churches in the United States assembled, through their delegates, as "Churches of Christ in America." This is not Christian union, of course, in its highest sense, but it is such a long stride toward it that one need not be surprised at what may take place any time looking to a more perfect union.

The first meeting of the council on Wednesday evening, December 2, in the Academy of Music, was a memorable gathering. The lower seats on the first floor were occupied by the delegates, while the galleries and boxes were crowded with visitors. A body of distinguished men occupied the platform. When the curtain in the rear of the platform arose, it revealed a chorus of one thousand singers, mostly women, with the men arranged in the center in the form of a cross. This black cross in a field of white made an imposing spectacle. After an anthem by the great chorus, the audience joined it in singing "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name." Never was hymn more appropriate, for it was the power of that name that is above every name that had gathered together this body of representative men from the leading Protestant bodies of America as "Churches of Christ."

The address by President W. H. Roberts called attention to the unique character of the council, and the advantages it offers for united, aggressive work against the forces of evil. It was a great address, worthy of the occasion and the cause. The addresses of welcome by two Philadelphia ministers, and the responses by two New Yorkers, were both witty and wise, in the main, and laid large emphasis, as might have been expected, upon the growing unity of the churches.

The session of the forenoon, Thursday, in Witherspoon Hall, was devoted to the reports of the executive officers. Dr. E. B. Sanford, secretary of the executive committee, gave "A Record of the Three Years' Work." If any one has supposed that nothing is done between the meetings of this body, representing nearly eighteen million Christians, this report will disabuse his mind. The repeal of the easy divorce law in South Dakota, the passage of the anti-gambling act in New York under the leadership of Governor Hughes, and the steps taken by this government to correct the abuse under King Leopold in the Congo Free State of Africa, were given as some of the wider results of the federal union of the churches.

The report of the executive committee pointed out the steps that had been taken since the great inter-church conference in New York City three years ago, by which this council has been made possible. Twenty-eight of the constituent bodies of that conference had approved the basis of federation submitted to them, and hence the plan becomes operative. Others have not taken action. None had rejected it.

Unity in the Foreign Fields.

The liveliest discussion, so far, was on the resolution submitted by the chairman of the committee on Foreign Missions and Christian Unity, by Dr. James L. Barton, corresponding secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. One of the resolutions submitted by him recommended "the elimination of denominational lines, as far as possible," in the foreign field. Naturally enough, this aroused the fear of some of the brethren lest denominationalism in the home land might fall under the ban. Two Methodist bishops offered amendments and opposed the original resolution. A Methodist editor, however, favored the resolution. Brother W. F. Richardson favored the original resolution, as did also some others, but finally a part of it was stricken out in deference to the brethren, who felt the language was extreme. There is no question but that the original resolution expressed the real convictions of a majority of the council, but as the foreign missionaries are already obliterating denominational distinctions as far as possible, it was not desirable to antagonize unnecessarily the prejudices of those who would be offended by the wording of the resolution. The spirit of the discussion was most admirable.

Bishop Hendrix, of Missouri, was elected president, and the retiring president, Dr. W. H. Roberts, congratulated him in a happy speech, the bishop responding in an equally felicitous address, accepting the responsibility. Bishop Hendrix, who is located in Kansas City, belongs to the Southern Methodists. He is an able and liberal-minded man, who has been active in this work from the beginning.

A great session was held Thursday evening in the interest of "Christian Unity and Foreign Missions" in the Witherspoon Hall and three other meeting places. The addresses by Rev. Arthur Lloyd and Robert E. Speer were great speeches in favor of Christian union. That of Mr. Speer, particularly, was one of the most convincing appeals for union in the foreign field, and against the policy of transplanting our sectarian divisions in non-Christian lands, to which we ever listened. Referring to the discussion in the afternoon about eliminating denominational distinctions in the foreign field, he said the council might vote as it pleased, but the missionaries and the native churches were already doing it, and would do it more and more. It was worth going to Philadelphia to hear that speech alone, if there had been nothing else. But there are great things ahead of us, no doubt.

This evening (Friday) the representatives of the Disciples of Christ who are present are to be given a dinner and reception at the Y. M. C. A hall by local Disciples, and we are anticipating a pleasant hour or two together. There is almost a full representation of delegates and alternates here, but there are not as many of our ministers and laymen present as there should be, and as there would be if the brethren understood the historic significance of such a movement toward unity and the rich feast of spiritual things here provided. There is an occasional outcropping of the denominational spirit, of course, but it usually meets with a cold reception. The sentiments most heartily applauded are those in sympathy with our Lord's prayer for unity. Never did we feel so sure that God is using this great co-operative movement of the religious bodies of this country for the bringing about of that unity of his children for which his fatherly heart must yearn.

Paul's Two "Standfasts."

Paul, the greatest of all the apostles, has two "stand fasts," both of which are essential to the carrying out of the program of Christ, and to any practicable plea for Christian union. We can not do better, at this crucial time in our history, than to renew our fealty to these two great principles in which we are exhorted to "stand fast."

In the first place, Paul exhorts the brethren at Corinth (1 Corinthians 16:13), to "Stand fast in the faith." There must be no surrender or compromise here. We know well what "the faith" meant to Paul. It was "Christ and Him crucified." It was "the glorious gospel of the grace of God." It was "the cross," in which alone he gloried; but these were all summed up in Jesus Christ—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." (Acts 16:31). "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Romans 10:9, 10). This was "the faith," the preaching of which, by Paul and his co-laborers, shook the Roman world of his day. It is "the faith" in which we are to "stand fast." Whoever yields his spiritual hold on Jesus Christ as the Son of God, the Savior from sin, and the Conqueror of death, loses the power by which this world is to be saved. Let it be clearly understood that "the faith" includes only what is vital, fundamental, essential. In that we are to "stand fast."

But the same great apostle exhorted the Galatian brethren, to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." Or, as we have it in the Revised Version: "For freedom did Christ set us free; stand fast, therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage." (Galatians 5:1). Christ set us free, the apostle declares, in order that we might exercise that freedom, and enjoy it. "Do not, therefore, allow yourselves to be entangled in a yoke of bondage such as these Judaizers would put upon you." Is there not need for this same exhortation to-day? As these Galatians were in danger of returning to the bondage of Judaism from which Christ had freed them, is there not danger that we may return to the bondage of sectarianism from which, through the grace of Christ, we have been made free? What was the bondage of sectarianism but the attempt to bind on the consciences of men the opinions and theories of others, and the denial of that freedom which we have in Christ Jesus? In so far as we yield to the clamor for making opinions concerning questions of Bible fact, or doctrine, a test of fellowship, we are returning to the bondage from which we have escaped, and are surrendering our plea for Christian union, which is based on the two pillars—unity of faith and liberty of opinion.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has always resisted any departure from "the faith" of the gospel, including obedience to the plain commands of Christ. It has, also, stood equally firm for the maintenance of Christian liberty, in the realm of opinion. When some among us said: "We can have no missionary societies, because there is no 'Thus saith the Lord' for them, and if you organize a missionary society you have departed from the faith," we withstood these brethren on the ground that they were interfering with Christian liberty. This is now acknowledged by all among us who have their faces turned toward the future. Again, some of our brethren contended that the use of instrumental music in the worship was a departure from "the faith" and that the church introducing such an innovation had forfeited its Christian standing. Again our contention was that these brethren were invading the realm of Christian liberty; that churches had a perfect right to use instrumental music in the worship, or not to use it, just as they might choose. Again the principles of Christian liberty won the day.

Now, the contention seems to be, by another class of brethren, that if a man accepts some of the views of modern historical criticism in reference to the Bible, even though he holds his faith in Jesus Christ and in the authority of the Scriptures, unshaken, and maintains a Christian character, he shall not receive recognition as a Christian minister among us, and to put him on the platform of our conventions to deliver an address is disloyalty to "the faith." Once more we lift up our voice in defense of Christian liberty, saying to these brethren, "You can not disfellowship a man who believes in Christ, obeys his requirements, and accepts the New Testament as his authoritative rule of faith, because he accepts some views of Biblical criticism, or interpretation, which you can not endorse, without throwing overboard the Declaration and Address, the publication of which, in 1809, was the beginning of this Reformation."

We urge upon the brethren everywhere the importance of both of these "stand fasts" of Paul: "Stand fast in the faith:" "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free." It is only by loyalty to both these great principles that we can hope to carry on successfully the great restoration movement in which we are engaged.

Notes and Comments

From a report on another page it will be seen that the Baptist convention of Western Canada has unanimously passed a resolution altogether in favor of union with the Disciples. It calls, of course, merely for the brethren to prayerfully consider the question of union, but it is a most hopeful fact that the system of co-operation that has been in force is to be continued.

Our Ministerial Association in St. Louis, at its last meeting, appointed a committee to draw up resolutions similar to those passed by the Indianapolis Ministerial Association, as reported in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The sentiments of the meeting seemed to be very strong against any further agitation of the report of the Centennial committee. The Kansas City Alliance has approved the Indianapolis action.

We are glad to give space in this issue to some statement in behalf of the old preacher and those who are dependent on him. No cause ought to be more sacred in the eyes of the active ministry than that of the man who has become disabled and been compelled to withdraw either by reason of infirmity or old age. We are among those who, like Brother Shelburne, deplore the tendency of many congregations to cast aside ministers thoroughly competent, very largely on the ground that they have passed a certain age limit. Men are not so estimated in other ranks of life. It is not a question of years in the business and professional world so much as it in the capacity or knowledge. A man widely versed in scripture and with a spirituality deepened by the experiences of life is not to be put to one side just because he is not quite so active in pastoral work. And while this is true, we are not unaware of the fact that something may be said on the other side about some ministers not keeping pace with the onward movement of the church. There is a duty ministers owe to themselves, as well as to the churches. We venture to think, however, that in a very small proportion of cases that have come under the notice of the Ministerial Board of Relief is there real blameworthiness attached to these old or disabled ministers of the gospel. For the most part, these men have done their best for the Cause we all love; for the most part they have sacrificed themselves and their families in that Cause. It is not an indiscriminate charity that the Ministerial Board of Relief calls upon the churches to support. It is a duty they have put before every one of us to band ourselves together in the day of our strength, and see that those who have faithfully stood by the colors shall not be left neglected when wounded and sore in their last days among us.

Commenting on our Savior's prayer for the unity of his disciples, The Examiner says:

"This precious prayer of our divine Lord strikes deeper than any superficial unity of organization. It was for 'the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace' between those who would accept him as Savior and Lord that Jesus prayed. That is a possible, a desirable, yea, an obligatory unity. Matters accounted important in organization, in creed, and in observance may separate the great army of Christian believers into sects for a time; but that is no reason why there should be strife or bitterness among them, or why they should fail to fulfil the law of Christ, and love each other in him who is Head over all. This holy unity of Christian love has been sadly neglected in past times; but there have been increasing signs of a blessed drawing together of Christ's flock in recent years, as brethren of different names have come to know each other better, through the welding power of common service in his name."

That the union for which Jesus prayed is not merely expedient but "obligatory" is a most wholesome truth. The statement that Christian believers may be by their difference separated into sects "for a time," shows that the editor rightly conceives of our denominational divisions as temporary. They do not represent the permanent condition of the church. "The welding power of a common service," under the guidance of the divine Spirit, will ultimately bring these separated brethren into the unity for which Jesus prayed. This "common service" is what is sought in the work of the Federal Council.

The ground of our objection to human creeds as a religious movement has often been misconceived by our own members. The mere writing out, in formal statements, the prevailing views of the church on theological questions, at any given time, was not objected to by the pioneers of our movement, but the binding of these statements on the consciences of others as authoritative. To quote from proposition VII of the Declaration and Address of Thomas Campbell:

"That although doctrinal exhibitions of the great system of divine truths, and defensive testimonies in opposition to prevailing errors, be highly expedient; and the more full and explicit they be for those purposes, the better; yet, as these must be in a great measure the effect of human reasoning and, of course, must contain many inferential truths, they ought not to be made terms of Christian communion: Unless we suppose, what is contrary to fact, that none have a right to the communion of the church, but such as possess a very clear and decisive judgment, or are come to a very high degree of doctrinal information; whereas the church from the beginning did, and ever will, consist of little children and young men, as well as fathers."

That is the ground on which we have based our objection to human creeds. The world would be poorer without the various Confessions of Faith which have marked the progress of the church through the centuries. It would be exceedingly interesting and edifying now to have a statement of the things most commonly believed by the evangelical Protestant churches of to-day, if such statement could be made simply for purposes of education and information, without having the slightest authority to bind any one's conscience, or to limit any one's freedom of thought. It would soon have to be revised, of course, to make it an adequate expression of the growing theology of the church. Such a statement would not be the creed of the church, but a statement of its theological views. Simon Peter, by the revelation made to him by God himself, made the true Confession of Faith, and gave to the church the creed, or rock foundation on which it rests, when he said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God." That is the faith out of which all true theology has grown and must grow.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A "Council of the Churches of Christ in America," in the city of Philadelphia! Think of it! Such a Council would have been as impossible, even ten years ago, as the complete organic union of all our Protestant bodies, at once, is to-day. What a revelation this Council would be if held even as far west and south as St. Louis, to the people of the great southwest! This raises the question: How far west could this Federal Council be held with the assurance of a hearty welcome, and the attendance and co-operation of the people in that region? Perhaps some educational work in that line will have to be done first, but some day we shall have a quadrennial session of this united body of Christian workers in Chicago or St. Louis. It would be the means of promoting wider fellowship, breaking down prejudices, cementing the ties of brotherhood, and massing the Christian forces against evil and unrighteousness. In a word, it would hasten, in all that region, the fulfillment of our Lord's prayer for the unity of his disciples.

The question has been asked more than once in this Council, "Whereunto will this thing grow?" Nobody knows. Everyone feels, however, that the movement is right; that God is in it; and that it has in it the promise and potency of more good for the human race than any of us can foresee. Perhaps some would draw back if they knew now where the natural and essential tendency and influence of this movement will lead them. God does not always show us the end from the beginning. It is best that he does not do so. He leads us on just as we are prepared for it. There is more danger that this Council will move too fast towards God's ultimate purpose, than too slowly. Already some prophetic souls have caught a vision of some of the things that are ahead of us, and their advanced utterances have caused the more timid and conservative to ask for a slower pace. We must regard men's natural prejudices, especially when these are in the process of being gradually removed. We must keep step together. Better go slow and go together, than to attempt to go too fast and in the long run hinder progress by the friction created. God will land us right, if we seek counsel from him. If this movement toward unity is from God, no human power, nor powers demoniac, can successfully resist it.

What should be the attitude of our own religious movement, which has Christian unity for its chief purpose, to this "Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America," whose purpose is to enlist all the evangelical Christian bodies in this country in a common service for the kingdom of God in the name and under the leadership of Jesus Christ? Happily, we have determined that question, and have put ourselves in sympathetic relation with it, and have become a constituent part of it, to the end that all lend our influence to help to every action that looks to the more speedy realization of Christ's prayer. It would be an anomalous situation for us if we had not done so. The fact that we are here, approving what seems to us right and opposing whatever motion seems to us unwise, gives proof to the religious world of the reality of our desire for Christian union. There has been very little to oppose, and that only in phraseology. There has been much to approve, and the enthusiastic applause of our group of delegates for every union sentiment has attracted the attention of the Council and the speakers. The delegations from the several religious bodies are seated together for convenience, and our delegates have been faithful in their attendance, and enthusiastic in their approval of all the great truths that are being uttered.

Last evening the brethren of this city, under the leadership of L. G. Batman, of the First Christian Church, gave our visiting delegates and members a royal feast at the Y. M. C. A. building. There was a goodly company present, and after the dinner there were a number of speeches made by local and visiting members. The time was so enjoyably spent that all regretted the necessity of closing early, in order to hear the addresses of the Council. Among those who made speeches were F. D. Power, Dr. E. E. Montgomery, of Philadelphia, G. P. Rutledge, pastor of the Third Church, W. T. Moore, J. A. Lord, Miner Lee Bates, W. F. Richardson, J. H. Garrison, and perhaps one or two others. Brother Batman presided. It was exceedingly kind in these Philadelphia brethren to give us this enjoyable occasion. The brethren in the east are fighting against odds which we in the west do not always understand, or appreciate. But they are steadily advancing and their fidelity is worthy of all commendation. We dispatched a little business at the banquet, growing out of our relations to the Federal Council, and closed a two hours' session of fellowship together that will hold a bright place in our memories for many years to come. We are said to be a "clannish people," sometimes. Perhaps we are, occasionally, too much so. But we do love each other, because of our common experiences, tasks and aspirations, just a little more than we love others, because we know each other better. But thank God for the growing catholicity of our ministers and members and for their generous recognition of Christian character and Christian truth wherever it may be found.

But what of unity among ourselves, while the great Protestant bodies are approaching each other and approaching Christ more closely? We who hold to the essential principles of our movement can not divide. We may differ in opinion, as we have a right to do, but we will not divide. Some of the brethren in the south are leaving us, because they have repudiated a fundamental principle of unity and of our movement, by making unity in opinions and methods concerning missionary work and public worship a test of fellowship. This we have designated as a sloughing off rather than a division—the throwing off, by a healthy body, of elements that can not be assimilated, being alien to the body. That process may continue. But those who accept the principles laid down in the Declaration and Address by Thomas Campbell, which is a faithful reflection of New Testament teaching, can not divide. There may be unpleasant controversies, and things may be said and done by heated partisans which we all regret, but the saving common sense and sanity of judgment of the great body of our people will assert themselves in due time, when there is opportunity for calm, dispassionate consideration. Let us furnish that opportunity now by the cessation of all bitter, personal controversy.

"The Overture for Peace" adopted by the Indianapolis ministers, and supported by St. Louis and Kansas City, presents the only feasible "way out." If the Centennial committee has erred in judgment, it is not the first mistake ever made by a program committee. Let us hope that it is not unpardonable. "But why not reverse the action, according to the desire of the brotherhood?" some one asks. It is by no means the unanimous, nor the overwhelming desire of the brotherhood. Is it worth while, think you, to line up and count votes on a question of this kind? That way lies strife and controversy prolonged. No, these ministerial bodies have shown us "a more excellent way." It is the way of brotherly love and forbearance. It is the way pointed out by the very principles of the Declaration and Address, whose centennial we are to celebrate. "Let brotherly love continue." These lines are hastily penned in the "City of Brotherly Love," and are submitted from a heart full of love to all the brethren.

BE STILL.

Be still, my soul, for God would speak to thee,
And teach thee words of wisdom thou shouldst know;
Alas, too often hast thou spurned his voice
And closed thine eyes to visions he would show.

Let anxious thought of worldly honor cease,
Let love of gain be driven from thine heart;
These can not help thee on the upward way,
Nor keep from out thy soul sin's fiery dart.

Be calm, and let the One who knoweth all
Impart the secret that will give thee peace,
And help in making clearer day by day
How burdened, anxious spirits find release.

Life's quiet moments bring the truest joys;
The thoughtful student wins the rarest prize.
So God, from out the quiet of our souls,
Will kindle holy aspirations for the skies.

The Great Law of Cost By William Durban

I have been considered fairly radical by some of my British friends and fairly conservative by others, so that nobody seems to have been able exactly to locate me. I do not wish to be located. I want always to go free and sell myself to no schools and no cliques. Therefore, I am now going to criticise freely a certain tendency which is perpetrating mischief for many of the churches and is cutting out of the book of Christian remembrance one of the grand old factors that should never be forgotten. The tendency now in very many pulpits, and also in many organs of the religious press, is to exalt incessantly the sort of humanitarianism which tells us to be useful; to serve; to socialize; to present God as an eternal and infinite celestial philanthropist; to preach Christ, who ever went about doing good, and to go and do likewise ourselves; to adjust conditions of temporal amenity for everybody; to ameliorate environment for all who are low down from whatever cause; to institutionalize every spiritual organization; to set up settlements of benefaction in every slum; to write a lively preface to the Millennium in every program of religious activity! Well, these items describe very well what we all ought to do in one direction. May everything so indicated be attempted in earnest! But human nature is rather fond of making a fool of itself, especially a religious fool, and here is the acme of religious idiocy. More and more the pulpits and the papers are losing sight of, and ignoring, the very condition which is the essential foundation of the whole of this tempting and glittering system of far-reaching humanitarianism. The divine indispensable is being largely forgotten, or recklessly eliminated. Let us see a moment how the process is working. It will account for some of the growing new troubles of the age.

I note that a very beautiful human Christ is being depicted in many contemporary sermons, but the matchless divine Christ is left out of sight. That is inevitable if the New Testament doctrine of the virgin birth is superseded by the gross theory, in which Haeckel so screamingly exults, concerning the ascription of the fatherhood of Jesus to a Roman centurion named Pandarus. The outcry in Germany compelled the audacious infidel professor of Jena to suppress the outrageous chapter in a later edition. But the equivalent repudiation of the celestial fatherhood is boldly emphasized by new theologians, and they are not ashamed. Of course not! Shame is an emotion that they would be ashamed to display, and this is the only phase of shame, theologically speaking, of which some schools of thinkers are susceptible. It is time to speak out on both sides. Let not all the plain talk be monopolized by one side, and that the side of negation or of rationalism in disguise. I should have been discontented with my grand old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST if it had not emphatically repudiated a certain tendency amongst even some of ourselves to attack the revelation of the supernatural under cover of a very plausible mode of ratiocination. Now, the new fashion of preaching subtracts from the old style of the whole law of cost. In a convention sermon at Bradford, the eminent Baptist minister of Cambridge, Rev. Johnston Ross, M. A., vehemently protested against this very process. His sermon was the most memorable utterance, I consider, before the Baptist Union of Great Britain, assembled in the great Yorkshire town last week. Mr. Ross complained of the very serious neglect of the preaching of the nature of sin, the necessity of repentance, the scriptural doctrine of humiliation before God, the cost of self-denial, the painfulness of cross-bearing, the test of self-sacrifice. The new and very easy preaching inculcates all kinds of precepts, without much reference to the divine law of cost insisted on by the gospel as Jesus adumbrated it, the apostles expounded it, and the martyrs exemplified it. All this light and easy talk about the service of man does not really bring us any nearer the solution of a single problem that worries society. Very few of the writers and preachers who are expressing themselves scornfully on the old-fashioned gospel of the Puritans, which made England and America great, even attempt to supply any true antidote for the evils that frown from gigantic old and new strongholds of iniquity. I note that the leaders of the new theology in my own country now rely on their recent incorporation of socialist programs into their schemes for winning the sympathy of the average working man. Well, the workingman Socialist has been already temptingly baited by the High Church party, for that party some time ago took up Christian Socialism very ostentatiously. The eloquent and fascinating Canon Scott Holland, a preacher to whom crowds of all classes love to listen, especially in St. Paul's cathedral, is now leader of the Christian Socialists of England, but he produces not the slightest appreciable effect in gaining the affections of the masses for Anglicanism. The Socialists are in the mass not religious. They are not irreligious. They are simply non-religious. They welcome the clerical advocates of their socialism, but the clericals have to go to them; they never, or at any rate very rarely, go to the clericals. Mr. Campbell, of the City Temple, has taken to calling himself a Socialist. He has gone over to the Socialist camp. But none that I can hear of come forth from the Socialist camp to patronize the new theology. The typical Socialist fights shy of all theology. No, the new preaching is an absolute and humiliating failure! And that is just what it deserves to be, for it crucifies afresh the Lord of Glory. Thus do I plainly deliver myself, for I trust that I may strike a chord of agreement in many true hearts.

Reality and Utility of Miracles By Prof. I. B. Grubbs

"The works which the Father hath given me to accomplish, the very works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me."—Jesus.

"Many other signs, therefore, did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that, believing you may have life in his name."—John.

"If the word spoken through angels proved steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation? which, having at the first been spoken through the Lord, was confirmed unto us by them that heard, God also bearing witness with them, both by signs and wonders, and by manifold powers, and by gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will."—Heb. 2:2-4.

The miraculous is but one form of the supernatural, the providential being the other. We do not and ought not to expect the working of a miracle in answers of prayer. These flow from special acts of the divine will, as also do miracles, but through the use of natural means and are thus distinguishable from the miraculous. To understand this distinction we should consider the analogy between the little world in which each of us lives, and that greater world to which we all belong. In each of these there is the association of the intellectual and moral with the material. Over each intelligence presides, and will-power originates activity. But the analogy extends still further. In the human system there are certain actions, like the circulation of the blood, and the expansion and contraction of the lungs in breathing, that are purely natural, or mechanical. They take place without a special act of the will, and go on while we are asleep as well as when we are awake. Many persons see nothing in the system of nature but mechanical operations like these. They talk about the "reign of law," and the "uniformity of the laws of nature" as if these afforded an adequate explanation of all the activities that are manifested in the universe. To discover their error let us return to the analogy between the two worlds, the little and the great, mentioned above. The movement of the hand in writing these lines, is not the mere result of organization, like the circulation of the blood, and the expansion and contraction of the lungs. It takes place by a special act of the will, yet in harmony with the reign of law in the system. We do not work miracles when we set our bodies in motion, or command the movement of any physical organs. And why can not a divine intelligence and a divine will preside over and control the machinery of the system of nature without miracle, and with infinitely more ease than human intelligence, and the human will can originate action in the human system? The evident possibility that it can and the positive assurance from the scriptures that it does, is a sufficient refutation of the mechanical theory of the "constitution and course of nature."

We are now prepared for definitions and distinctions. A miracle is an event produced by a special act of the divine will, but without the use of natural means, and is thus distinguishable from a providential event. Both emanate from special divine agency, and are, therefore, equally supernatural. But they differ in that cooperation with the forces of nature is involved in the latter case and not in the former. And it is clear that the definition of the miraculous, as here given, is comprehensive enough to embrace all miracles; such, for example, as the act of creation, which, so far from involving the use of natural means, was the divine act by which the whole machinery of nature was brought into existence. We have no miracles in our day because none are needed. But there is abundant room in the economy of God for divine answers to human petitions. "Let us come therefore, boldly to a throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need."—Heb. 4:16. In conducting his great moral government, and in compassing the ends of his providence, God can and does proceed without miraculous agency. But in communicating his will and his purposes to mankind and in giving assurance of his presence and his power, the miraculous finds its appropriate sphere. How indeed could a message or a messenger from God be accredited as such, apart from supernatural credentials,

Our Centennial and Ministerial Relief

Some Facts Concerning Ministerial Relief.

The missionary year that closed with the New Orleans convention was significant in the history of ministerial relief. It revealed most clearly the fact that the demands of this work are increasing with the years. It is also evident that we must increase the support we have been giving those now on our annuitant list, and that, logically, we must expect this list to grow with the growth of our people. The pioneer work of the restoration movement has not all been done, neither have the sacrifices essential to such work all been made. While we have come to the strength of numbers, and to the power and influence of a great religious people, there still remain important victories to be won.

Not only are we now making the history of our Centennial year, but we are also "setting the pace" for the new century's work. This ought to be not only a season for great rejoicing, but also for the careful resetting of noble purposes with the entire brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ. We have made a beginning, our work is yet before us. There are some things we must surely do this year. And one of the things that calls most loudly for its proper place and support among us is our work of ministerial relief. While the report of the board at the New Orleans convention was very encouraging, yet it was far short of what it should have been. A 35 per cent increase in receipts over the receipts of the previous year gives occasion for rejoicing. Then the convention gave such an encouraging beginning for the present year. The splendid offering on Lord's day of more than $2,000 was made possible by the marked liberality of our good brother, R. A. Long, of Kansas City, Mo., in his magnificent gift of $1,000, making the total offering more than double that of any previous convention.

These facts record an increased interest in this work and encourage us to believe that we have come to the time when we are going to give our aged and disabled ministers the support due them. The fact is that if we shall go to Pittsburg next October and leave no stain upon that celebration, we must meet the demands of this ministry. And the prospects now are that this Centennial year will be noted in the history of our ministerial relief work. The awakened interest is sure to manifest itself in practical results. Two thousand five hundred dollars is the watchword. This will double the receipts of last year, but it is not too much to expect, and that amount will be necessary if we shall do the work as it should be done and properly report ourselves at our great Centennial gathering.

Seen in Its Proper Light.

A matter of such vital importance to the plea we make, and involving in a way that no other matter does the honor of the church and the dignity of the Christian ministry, can not be set aside by any pretext whatsoever. It must be given the consideration its importance demands. Indifference toward the wornout men in our ministry is disrespect toward the active men in our ministry. When understood, the Disciples of Christ are not a people to disregard a divine requirement.

The high note of duty done in love, so forcefully sounded in that splendid convention address by that princely man of God, Vernon Stauffer, touched a responsive chord that echoed back the assurance of a growing interest in the holy cause of ministerial relief. We are understanding as we have not understood, and we are going to support as we have not been supporting the work of this ministry. Every active preacher of the gospel ought to see his own ministry in relation to this work. This will guarantee that the people with whom he labors will understand their relation to it, and these two things will insure the support of the "Old Guard." Our people only want to know, they are ready to do.

What We Did Last Year.

Seventy-four preachers and preachers' widows, together with their dependents, a total of about 130 persons, were dependent upon the board of ministerial relief last year. And while we were not able with the funds in our hands to supply all the needs of these aged and dependent saints, we are glad to say we did give some assistance to every worthy applicant. These people are scattered over twenty different states, showing that this work is not a local affair, but a great general interest that ought to be supported by the entire brotherhood. Forty states contributed toward the support of the work last year. This and the largest list of contributors in the history of the work is the record for the year closing September 30, 1908. We supplied, to the extent of our financial ability, the needs of these brethren of our Lord. We carried the sunshine of love and brotherly kindness into the homes of weary, sad and discouraged saints. We caused them to rejoice and in their thanksgiving to say, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." We want every contributor to this work to share with us the joy that comes in giving to such a holy cause.

What We Want in This Centennial Year.

We want two thousand churches and two thousand individuals to make their contributions to this work this year. We want a Centennial offering from every preacher in the brotherhood, if possible. We want the church to realize that this is her work. We want the old preachers to understand that the support we give them is theirs by right of service rendered. We want the church to see in the bent forms and tottering steps of these battle-scarred and bleeding saints the marks of faithful service, and to hear in the call for their support the voice of praise for sacrifice and devotion. We want this work of ministerial relief to bind the past to the present in a fellowship of service, "mingling the tears of the sower with the songs of the reaper."

We want the whole church to hear the calls that come to us from our needy old brethren and to help answer these calls. The following is from an old brother now past 86 years old and who preached regularly and faithfully for more than a half century:

"My Dear Brother: With a sad heart I announce to you that my dear wife departed this life October 19 and I am left alone in my old age and feeble condition. We traveled life's journey together for fifty-nine years in peace and love, and I must make the short part of the journey that is left without her to encourage and help bear the burdens. God gave her me and took her away. I try to say 'Thy will be done.' There were few better women. She had great love for her husband, her children, her neighbors, and the church of which she became a member at the age of 15. I want to ask your board to help me all you can. Her burial expense, the cheapest I could get, was $50 for the coun and shroud, and I had to borrow the money. I hope you can in part relieve me. I am so lonely. I will soon meet her in glory. Pray for me. I am your loving brother."

We have just received and answered this pitiful appeal. This worthy old brother has been receiving $100 a year, which should have been at the very least $400. We tell you this, brethren, that you may know what kind of history the Disciples of Christ have been making. Who among us is not ashamed that we have been so indifferent toward this ministry? But we are going to do better. Immediately upon reading this, take up the matter with your congregation and let us hear from you in an offering to this work. Make the third Lord's day in December conspicuous in this Centennial year. Let us begin now to observe this day as we have never yet done. Let us give it the place and consideration its importance demands. Once we meet the requirements of this work its future will be assured, and such an item as the above will never again find a place in our history. You may leave duty and conscience out, and the gratitude of these old saints ought to call forth a liberal support. Read these:

Echoes from Some Pitiful Remittances.

From an old Virginia soldier:

"Dear Brethren: I write you a few lines in order to try to express my appreciation for draft just received in time of my great need and affliction. I only make an effort to express my thanks to God and to the board. Would be glad if I had language at my command to express my thanks, but have not; hope the effort will suffice. I am made to feel like the Psalmist David when he exclaimed, 'Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me praise his holy name.'"

From a widow in Kansas:

"Dear Brother Orcutt: Your kind favor was again most thankfully received. Words would fail me if I should try to tell you how grateful I am to the Board

CAUSE AND EFFECT

Indigestion and the attendant discomforts of mind and body are certain to follow continued use of improper food.

Those who are still young and robust are likely to overlook the fact that, as dropping water will wear a stone away at last, so will the use of heavy, greasy, rich food, finally cause loss of appetite and indigestion.

Fortunately many are thoughtful enough to study themselves and note the principle of Cause and Effect in their daily food. A N. Y. young woman writes her experience thus:

"Sometime ago I had a lot of trouble from indigestion, caused by too rich food. I got so I was unable to digest scarcely anything, and medicine seemed useless.

"A friend advised me to try Grape-Nuts food, praising it highly, and as a last resort, I tried it. I am thankful to say that Grape-Nuts not only relieved me of my trouble, but built me up and strengthened my digestive organs so that I can now eat anything I desire. But I stick to Grape-Nuts."

of Ministerial Relief for these timely favors, especially at this time of the year when there is coal and so many other things to buy to make us comfortable for the cold weather. I feel that I have much to be thankful for, and may the dear Father above, who is the given of every blessing, richly bless and reward all who have so kindly remembered us, is my prayer."

From an old saint in Texas:

"Dear Brother Orcutt: You do not know how glad I was to receive your draft for $25. You may think you do, but unless you have been in my condition you can not fully feel the joy that I experienced at seeing in your draft that you had not forgotten me. Old people are anxious to be remembered by their friends, and the tears of joy will flow freely from a true heart when he realizes that he still lives in the memory of the true and good. Thank God for his mrcies and for good Christian men who have the mind of Christ. Please extend my thanks to the board for their kind favor. My health is feeble and my wife is very low. We thought several times she was dying. May heaven's blessings crown your every effort to feed the hungry, clothe the destitute and administer to the wants of the poor old sick soldier of Jesus the Lamb of God, who gave himself for us. I am your fellow-worker for the dear Christ. Praise his holy name. I am so happy. Don't forget to pray for me and my dear wife. I am yours lovingly."

Brethren, Let Us Pray.

And when we have talked this matter over with our Father and asked his blessing upon the "Old Guard," and that his wisdom guide us in our relation to and dealing with this ministry, let us open our eyes to the responsibility and our hearts to the need of this work; and then let us arise, as the followers of the Christ, to do according to our prayers, showing by our deeds our likeness to him in the service we render those so much needing our help. And so the Father's blessing will then reach these needy old saints through a people faithful to their Lord.

And now let us have a general and a generous offering. Third Lord's day in December is the time. Remember this is our Centennial year. Be sure your church is in line with her offering. Remit early so that if possible we may increase the January payment. Make your exchange payable to Board of Ministerial Relief. Address 120 East Market street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

The Old Preacher By Cephas Shelburne

The "Old Preacher!" God bless him, God pity him and keep him in his old age, prematurely forced upon him by the Christian churches! This week there came into my home one of these old preachers. He had been in the ministry for thirty years, had served some of the best churches in his brotherhood. But he was climbing toward the sixty mark, his head was growing somewhat white, and though rich in experience, sound in judgment, at his best morally, he was "turned down" for young blood, these kids in the pulpit just out of school, until the poor fellow had not the heart to try another church, "only to be turned down on account of his age." This man was strong physically, mentally and spiritually. He was taking the census of our county and city and canvassing for a directory—doing more tramping around and giving more spiritual advice and comfort in his visits than many a young man in a year's pastorate. Yet the churches said, "too old." When Dr. William Osler, the celebrated physician and surgeon, announced to the world his famous declaration that "men are comparatively useless after forty, and should be chloroformed at sixty," there was a wild protest, and there was a cry from all quarters, "Shoot him! He ought himself to be chloroformed!" But is not the statement of this extravagant doctor just the position of our churches with reference to our old preachers, "useless after forty," and pushed aside at fifty?

Everywhere young men are being pushed into the best pulpits. Does not modern business competition and church competition encourage a conspiracy of the beardless to shut out the graybeards from the paying positions and pulpits? This instance, one of the many, came under my observation recently. A preacher past the forty-five mark visited a church at their invitation. He was acknowledged a most vigorous pulpit man, the church recognized his wisdom and acceded to the great work that he had done. He was in his prime mentally, his rich experience would be of value to any church. This man had really just reached the position where he was best able to take charge of a church and serve it. But he soon received a message saying that the church had employed a "young man just out of school." There lately resigned from one of the pulpits of our city a very fine man to go into business. His plea was, "I will soon reach 'the dead-line of fifty,' and I will save myself the mortification of being turned down or called a 'back number.'" I plead in behalf of the old preacher, made old by the "dead line" drawn by our churches, by the Osler method of chloroforming, that it is a great injustice to these worthy men. The whole system is false, contrary to human reason and the experience of history. We are turning down men at their best, when they are most capable and best able to serve the churches and brotherhood. All great enterprises and institutions need behind them the ripe judgment and experience of years. The veteran lawyer makes the decisive argument in a difficult case before a court; an experienced physician is called into consultation; the most important supreme court in the United States is made up of men past the "dead line;" the prime ministers of England became premier after middle age; our best college presidents have been such men as Timothy Dwight, Wolsey and Hopkins. Richard S. Storrs did not reach his fullest intellectual stature or achieve his highest oratorical triumphs until he had reached threescore. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler is giving the world his best utterances and soundest advice to-day. Gladstone delivered the most thrilling public address of his long life at eighty-six. Had Abraham Lincoln died at fifty the world would scarcely have heard of him. John Wesley did his best preaching after he was eighty, and John Milton gave us "Paradise Lost" at fifty-six. The personages of the Old Bible, those who wrought out the world's redemption and greatness, were old preachers of righteousness.

"In 1870," says Dr. Cuyler, "the presumptuous emperor of France fancied that he could lead a French army into Berlin as easily as the first Napoleon had done; but he soon butted out his own brains against the three old heads of Kaiser Wilhelm, Bismarck, and General Von Moltke. When that veteran statesman, the late Marquis of Salisbury, held the helm, the Conservative party rode on triumphantly; when younger hands grasped the helm, the ship soon got into the trough of the sea, and seems at the present writing to be in peril of political wreck."

"An old age, serene and bright,
And lovely as a Lapland night,
Shall lead thee in thy way."

We have our ministerial relief day. We talk glibly about the debt we owe our aged ministers, and it is right and proper that we should provide a home for them in their old age; but there are hundreds of preachers who are asking nothing more than that they be given work, that they be retained in service or called to pulpits and pastorates that they are abundantly able to fill—whose experience, wisdom, education, broad judgment and physical strength, should give them recognition and a good living. When the young men who are entering the ministry are promised a living salary, and are assured that they will be retained in pulpits as long as they are capable of giving worthy and faithful service, the "Preacher Problem" will be easy enough of solution—it will be solved.

TRUTH TRIUMPHANT.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

He errs, who thinks by mortal might
To turn the course of truth and right;
To quench the rays of heaven's light
With clouds of ill.

Truth is of God, and must prevail;
Her laws stand fast, and can not fail;
The word of kings can not avail
To stay her will.

FEARED BEING GRABBED

Woman's Nervousness from Coffee Drinking.

The brain acts through the nerves.

When the nerves are irritated by coffee drinking the mind often imagines things which have no real existence—such as approaching danger, unfriendly criticism, etc.

A Mich. woman suffered in this way but found how to overcome it. She writes:

"For twenty years, I drank coffee thinking it would give me strength when tired and nervous.

"The more coffee I drank the more tired and nervous I became until I broke down entirely. Then I changed my work from sewing to house-work. This gave me more exercise and was beneficial, but I kept on drinking coffee—thought I could not do without it.

"I was so nervous at times that if left alone I would not go from one room to another for fear someone would grab me, and my little children had to go around on tiptoe and speak in whispers.

"Finally an attack of the grip weakened me so my nerves rebelled and the smell even of coffee was nauseating. Then my husband prepared some Postum for me, believing the long use of coffee had caused my breakdown, so that my head and hands shook like palsy.

"At first I did not like Postum but I kept on drinking it, and as we learned how to make it right according to directions on pkg., I liked it as well as coffee.

"Occasionally I make coffee when we have guests and give it to the children, too, but as soon as they taste it they return their cups for Postum. Now I go anywhere in the house, day or night, and never think of any one grabbing me, and the children can romp as healthy children should—my nerves are all right." "There's a Reason."

"In Faith, Unity: In Opinion, Liberty"

A SYMPOSIUM.

As to the distinction between faith and opinion, it may be well to refer to the commonly received view of the fathers on this matter. They held that faith had to do with facts; opinion with the philosophy of these facts. The line that they drew was with respect to what is clearly revealed and enjoined by precept or example in the Word of God, and that which had to be determined by inference or by philosophy. My own view of the matter may be expressed as follows: Matters of faith relate to definite and unmistakable declarations of the Word of God as these relate to our Lord Jesus Christ and our duty to him. Our faith must always be personal, resting on him. Opinion must be regarded with considerable latitude, relating mainly to general matters without any very specific or definite revelation in the Word of God. It is somewhat difficult to draw the line exactly between the two, though undoubtedly there is a difference; and this difference ought to be recognized. There are a great many things that differ where it is impossible to fix the boundary line between them in our perception of the difference, and yet no one doubts that there is a difference. However this may be, it is certain that the Disciples as a religious people have always stoutly contended that matters of faith must not be confounded with matters of opinion. It is safe to say, therefore, that this has always been a fundamental feature of our religious movement.

W. T. Moore.

Columbia, Mo.

It is hard to draw the dividing line between faith and opinion. If we accept the well-nigh all-prevailing statement that our faith must be in a person and not in a statement of views, we may easily discover the difference between faith and opinion. To illustrate: I have faith in Jesus as the divine Son of God, that he was born of the Virgin Mary, and that he was God manifest in the flesh. This faith is absolute. Accepting this statement as a matter of faith, I may have my opinion as to when he became the divine Son of God, whether at his birth, at his baptism, or when he demonstrated his power by his resurrection from the grave. I may hold to either one of these opinions about the Christ without invalidating my faith in him. Our faith must be in the Christ, the divine Son of God, and in this there must be unity. We may have opinions of him and of his work, and in these there must be liberty.

Chicago, Ill. S. J. Clarke.

It is not always easy to draw the line between faith and opinion. But there is a difference. If the Disciples could have a body to define what subjects are to be held as matters of faith, and what as matters of opinion, we would have fewer dissensions, and, probably, fewer victories. Aye, there's the rub. Who shall decide? The essay that some have made to decide, has darkened our heavens with controversy. Two courses are open to the Disciples of Christ: on matters clearly revealed there must be belief concerning the facts, and the widest liberty allowed in the interpretation of them. Here is where opinion may have the fullest sway. Those who hold the modern view might find a working basis in the position, provided they do not use language in a double sense. Faith, as defined by the Standard Dictionary, is "the assent of the mind or understandin~ to the truth of what God has revealed; belief in the testimony of God as contained in Scripture." "An opinion is a general conclusion held as probable, though without full certainty." One may believe in the fact of future punishment. He may hold as an opinion that it is not endless in duration, and that reformation is its object. If that be a just distinction, I can see how one can hold to the fact of miracles, and have any satisfying theory concerning his interpretation of the facts. But I do not understand that one can deny the miracles, or any clear statement of Scripture, and become a Christian by confessing that "Jesus Christ is the Son of God." The person of Christ means very little to me unless I am assured that he was a teacher sent from God, and that he reverenced the Scriptures, affirming that "the Scriptures can not be broken." I mention this, because some write, in these unsettled times, as if belief in Christ remanded all else of revelation to the sphere of opinion. This symposium is timely, and I hope some helpful distinctions between matters of faith and opinion will result.

E. B. Barnes.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

A great brotherhood has for years cherished the motto. "In faith, unity; in opinions, liberty; in all things, charity." While there seems no disposition openly to renounce this motto, it is evident that in recent years unity, liberty and charity among some of our people are gradually dissolving. This means simply that the motto is losing its power and that it is in danger of being held only as a stone holds the fossil after its life has departed. No misfortune could be more lamentable than that we should forsake the very idea upon which our whole movement proceeds, and I am sure that most of us will not for a moment believe that this will be done. To this principle we look for the union of the Christian world, and just now we seem at the threshold of its larger acceptance. It is certainly not a time now to abandon it.

But if we are to hold fast to this doctrine, it must be well defined and carefully guarded. What then is the "faith" in which there should be unity? Our fathers well understood this word, and we also well understand it when preaching against sectarianism. We applaud men of other churches when now and then they affirm that there is but one article in the Christian creed, that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God;" and then some of us face about and seek to disfellowship a brother who believes this truth as firmly as we, but who differs from us perhaps on the interpretation of some of Jesus' sayings. We try to make it appear that if he does not accept our views of the Master's words, he is denying the essential faith. Yet, that is the very essence of sectarianism.

But how are we to know whether a brother believes in the divine sonship of Jesus? To this we must give the simple apostolic answer: in two ways, (1) by public confession, and (2) by obedience to the commands of Jesus including a Christian life. But is not any man an infidel who does not accept the words of Jesus? This is the issue of many to-day. The fact is that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred in which Christian men are charged with rejecting the teaching of Jesus, the charge is false. If anything is rejected, it is only somebody's theory of Jesus' teaching. But, it may be asked, when the plain meaning of the Saviour's words is not accepted, how must the case be viewed? To this we must say, that the plain meaning is also a very poor test; for every intelligent man knows that often the so-called "plain meaning" of an ancient speech, and especially of an uncertain translation of that speech, is the wrong meaning. We have often had occasion to point out this fact to others. The "plain meaning" makes Jesus teach hatred of parents (Luke 14:26), rejection of sacrifice (Matt. 9:13), non-attendance of fathers' funerals (Matt. 8:22), the Ptolemaic movements of the sun (Matt. 5:45), and many other things that he really did not teach, except to those who were unlearned in Hebrew idioms.

One of the weaknesses of men, and we get worse as we grow older, is to count our own interpretations and theories infallible. We forget that this is the realm of opinions and the sphere of liberty. Here there is room for investigation and for discussion, but not for invective and personal accusation. We may believe that heaven will smile upon a people who are ready to hear and study all questions proposed by those who are sober and intelligent; but the wrath of God is surely against the man, be he preacher, professor, or editor, who maliciously charges a Christian brother with unbelief. I speak plainly. I verily believe that the hatred that prompts the word "infidel" applied to some of our brethren is a thousand times more heretical and destructive than the doctrines of such brethren, however false they may be.

But where shall we draw the line of fellowship and fraternal sympathy? Just where we have always taught, at the point of open denial of the messiahship of Jesus, or a persistent disregard of his commands. We must not go further. If men are to lose our co-operation and Christian regard because of difference of doctrine, whether it be on criticism, missionary methods, church polity, or even christology, our peculiar work as a people is done. All our hopes of leading Christians to unity are blasted as buds by an untimely frost. Nor is this all. Christian union can not come to pass on any plan that denies to a vast body of biblical scholars the utmost freedom of investigation and conclusion. Intelligent, liberty-loving men of every church will forever despise any union in which they are to be branded as renegades and infidels. Unity must compass differences in the spirit of toleration. As the world advances differences will not decrease, but will continue to increase; and a theory of union that does not make room for them may as well be abandoned at once. May Heaven give us, and protect for us, a plea that is broad enough for all Christian thought and work and fraternal enough to accord a hearty welcome to every truth-seeking, right-living and Christ-loving child of redemption.

Clinton Lockhart.

Texas Christian University.

I agree with you that at the present we ought to be clear in our thinking on theological questions, especially the ones giving rise to acrimonious discussions. Some of our brethren need to study again the history of ecclesiastical creeds, and their obscuration of the simple and precious truths of New Testament Christianity. Must our glorious movement for religious liberty be checked and limited by bondage to dogma from which the fathers of the Restoration freed us? Must there be among us the pathetic repetition that marked the decline of the Lutheran Reformation when theological opinion forged a creed almost as binding as that of the Catholic Church? Opinions write creeds and chain with them the souls of men. Opinions promulgate dogmas and prison men within them, hedging them about with high-sounding declarations of authority. Opinions bear their inevitable fruit in rich and aristocratic institutions —creeds, ecclesiastics, articles of faith, bishops and popes, all come from the domination of opinion.

Faith produces life, Christian faith Christian life. Here we find the fruits of the spirit—love, joy and peace. Christian faith is in a Person—the Person, Jesus the Christ, the Son of the Living God. I understand that this is fundamental. Faith is personal, vital and brings into my life through Christ all the essential values of the Christian experience. This is the only test of fellowship, for it is all that Jesus required. In this then—in faith—there is unity; it can not be otherwise. We are one in Christ by faith. In our interpretation of the Christ there must be liberty. What his relation to the Father, what his relation to man—these are questions for opinion, for theology, if you please. When we leave the realm of personal experience and pass to that of intellectual speculation we go from faith to opinion. In faith there is unity, because we are one in Christ, in opinions there must be liberty, or we shall write a creed and enslave the freemen of the loving Lord.

Alexander Campbell on Co-Operation

From the Millennial Harbinger, 1835, pp. 120-122.

I am glad to hear that the brethren in many places are waking up to a sense of their responsibility in reference to the conversion of the world. If they do not act, as well as think and talk about this duty enjoined on them, they will be ashamed of themselves when they think of appearing before the King, who, during his absence, has enjoined it upon his disciples to let their "light shine"—to "contend for the faith"—to regard themselves in their church capacity as "the pillar and support of the truth"—as those by whom the word of the Lord is "to run," "sound forth," "and be glorified"—as left on earth to leaven the whole mass of society with the doctrine of the Reign of Heaven.

That we should be fearful of doing wrong by setting a bad example, is reasonable enough; but that Christians should do nothing for the conversion of the world beyond the immediate influence of their personal behaviour, must spring from a morbid sensibility, from a sort of mental or moral dyspepsia, of which they ought to be cured if possible; for to do nothing, is to set example more injurious to society than any other of which I can conceive a Christian capable. We are all accustomed to expect that a benevolent mind, possessed of some valuable knowledge, will be active in blessing others according to the value which he esteems it to have been to himself. It is of the very essence of goodness to be communicative; and as we are doubly blessed in blessing others, there is nothing which can impart purer delight to an intelligent Christian than the thought that he has been instrumental in the salvation of one of his own race. For certainly if angels rejoice over one returning sinner, he who may be the means or the instrument of such a glorious event, may rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Co-operation among Christian churches in all the affairs of the common salvation, is not only inscribed on every page of apostolic history, but is itself of the very essence of the Christian institution. The kingdom of the Messiah is one and indivisible—one body and one spirit. The innumerable little communities of which it is composed are but so many component parts of Christ's body, all animated by his spirit. They as naturally coalesce under the dominion of spiritual gravitation as the particles of matter in one globe make one mass under the sovereignty of physical attraction.

So perfect is the union, communion and co-operation under Christ the living head, that if one member suffer, is honored or dishonored, all members sympathize with it. Every individual member and every individual community has its own private and personal rights and privileges, as it has its own identity; but in all things necessary to the growth, prosperity, honor and happiness of the body, there is but one interest, feeling, aim and effort. Like the ten thousand families of the royal tribe of Judah, while each had its own possessions, rights, immunities and discipline, in all that pertained to the tribe, they flowed together as the drop of rain within the banks of the Jordan.

Should any one ask how far this co-operation is to be carried, we would answer in general terms, to the utmost bounds of every obligation arising from the love of Christ to the church, and from his general philanthropy exhibited in his tasting death for all. In its details it comprehends all that can be done for the purity, peace and prosperity of the Israel of God, and for the salvation of all the ends of the earth. Churches are, then, to co-operate in prayer, in counsel, in combined efforts, in giving and receiving all sorts of aid, as times, circumstances and exigencies may demand. They are to put forth all their energies and all their means of doing good wherever there is good to be done, at home or abroad, until the knowledge of the glory of God cover the whole earth as the waters cover the bosom of the ocean.

There is too much squeamishness about the manner of co-operation. Some are looking for a model similar to that which Moses gave for building the tabernacle. These seem not to understand that this is as impossible as it would be incompatible with the genius of the gospel. A model for translating the scriptures from Greek into Latin, and Latin into the English, French and Spanish tongues; a model for making types, paper, ink, and for printing the Bible, might be as rationally expected, as a model for co-operation of churches on the banks of the Ohio for republishing the gospel in the valley of the Mississippi.

The only model that could be given is, that the first churches in Judea, Samaria, Galatia, etc., etc., did all they could in the way of sending out and supporting those who labored in the gospel among the heathen, and that they did it in the best manner they could. For them they prayed, and for them they contributed all carnal and temporal things, according to their several ability and the demands of society. Let us, then, go and do likewise, and not spend our days in talking about the ways and means, and in doing nothing.

Some Christians ought never to pray in public, on the principle they refuse to co-operate. They are afraid of setting a bad example—of not acting perfectly right. Well, they may set a bad example in the matter or manner of their prayers in public, and err both in matter and manner. Ought they, then, always to refuse to pray? If not, then not refuse to do all they can in co-operation with their brethren in the furtherance of the gospel. And if they can show a more rational or scriptural plan of going to work in this great design of reforming the church and saving the world, let them come and show it, and demonstrate their willingness to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

SOME OF OUR BIBLE SCHOOLS

ALBIA, IA.

H. M. Newell, supt.; Mrs. Boice Miller, asst.; Miss Jessie Lee, sec.; Miss Carrie Whellock, asst.; Miss Emma Ireland, treas. Enrollment, 300; average attendance, 200.

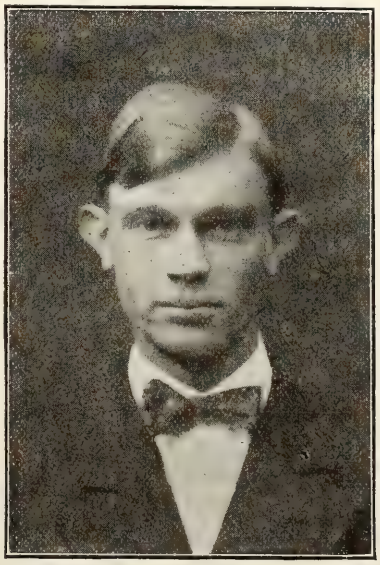
There is a separate primary department, of which Mrs. George Hobson is superintendent. It has an enrollment of 75, and an average attendance of 60. This department is hampered by too small quarters. The Adult Movement class for men has twenty-six enrolled, and an average attendance of fifteen. One for women has enrolled forty-six, and its average attendance is twenty-five. There is a ladies' Bible class with twenty-five enrolled. There are thirty in the teacher-training class. The average collection is $4.00, and the school contributes $75 to missions.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Second Christian.

H. M. Kruse, supt.; W. O. Reeves, asst.; Miss L. Norling, sec.; P. P. Green, assistant sec.; A. J. Kruse, treas.; E. Daugherty, primary supt.; Mrs. Claycamp, assistant primary; O. Probst, librarian. Enrollment, 270; average attendance, 190.

This school has a primary department, six junior classes, five intermediate and two senior classes. A teacher-training class is being organized, and in answer to the question, "What of your equipment?" the superintendent replies, "The Bible and a good pair of lungs." The average collection is $4.50. The home mission offering was double the apportionment, and amounted to $35.78. Mrs. Claycamp is preparing a class of ten in the primary department, to graduate at Christmas. These little ones know a great deal when they leave the primary, being able to repeat the Lord's Prayer, mention all the books of the Bible, Ten Commandments in rhyme, and several important verses of scripture. Mr. Reynold Truerman, superintendent of the Junior, is actively engaged in teaching this department the Ten Commandments. The intermediate department, led by Miss Anna Fawcett, boasts of the champion class in collection, and the best baseball team, it having won the pennant from the Sunday-school league.



H. M. Kruse,
Superintendent Second Church, St. Louis.

HAMILTON, ILL.

J. H. Berry, supt.; J. P. Guthrie, asst.; Edith Dennison, sec.; O. C. McCartney, treas. Enrollment, 150, not including Cradle Roll or Home Department; average attendance, 110.

This school is organized, there being Cradle Roll (30) beginners, primary, junior, intermediate, adult and home departments (30). Mrs. Reyburn has a young ladies' class of eleven taking the teacher-training course; Mrs. I. White teaches a class of women numbering twelve, and H. G. Waggoner, the minister, has a union class just organized. A teacher-training class of nine has just graduated. The equipment is inadequate. The free-will offerings by classes amounts to $2.50 weekly. Last year the Foreign Society offering was $27.61; for state work $6.00 was contributed, and to the County Union $6.25.

EAST DALLAS, TEXAS.

C. F. Roderick, supt.; W. P. Nelson, sec. and treas.; Chase Holland and John Boyd, assistants. Enrollment, 150; average attendance, 115.

This school has an adult Bible class and a teacher-training class, both growing and doing good work. All its departments are graded. The equipment is not of the best on account of anticipation of moving into a new building at a future date. The collections average about $4, and the treasurer has entire charge of these. The school generally gives $100 for Foreign Missions, and does the best it can for home and state work.

—A. H. Jordan, of the Central Church, New Castle, Pa., preached the Thanksgiving sermon for the churches of the Fifth ward of that city, and J. F. Baxter, of the Third Church, preached the sermon for the Seventh ward churches.

—W. T. Fisher gets out a very excellent little paper for the church at Clarinda, Ia. We note a mistake, however, in its column about "What Scholars Say About Baptism"—the English evangelist is Varley and not Farley.

—J. H. Mavity, who has been sick for the past seven months from typhoid fever, is just beginning work again at Fowler, Ind., and has changed his address from Noblesville. We are glad to know that he is able to be in the saddle again.

—J. M. Monroe has recently dedicated four churches in Oklahoma, and eleven others are in process of construction in the eastern part of the state, while in several places lots have been purchased and subscriptions raised for buildings.

—We very much regret to learn of the death of J. Carroll Stark, one of our oldest preachers. He has fought the good fight and served many important churches in his fifty-eight years of ministry. Further particulars will appear in another issue.

—W. M. Pysher is open to conduct evangelistic meetngs. He has just held a good one at Niotaze, Kan., where he is located. There has been splendid interest and a full house every night. The Endeavor Society here has an attendance of about 200 people.

—H. C. Holmes, pastor of the Christian Church at Lawrenceville, Ill., recently visited Sumner and delivered an address entitled "The Measure of a Man." It was very much appreciated, and the local correspondent of one of the newspapers reports that it was a real uplift to the community.

—Gipsy Smith, the famous English evangelist, is to hold a meeting in St. Louis, beginning January 24, and the new Coliseum building has been engaged. Those who read Brother Power's recent letter on this evangelist's work will know that he is one of the sanest as well as the most fervent of well known evangelists.

—S. Boyd White has accepted a call to the Central Church at Moberly, Mo., to begin his pastorate about January 1. He leaves Bellevue, Ky., much to the regret of the church there. In his two years' ministry at Bellevue there have been more than 100 additions to the congregation, and improvements to the building costing about $5,000.

—J. W. Walker, pastor of the Christian church at Miller, Neb., has returned from a short visit to his father at Scotts Bluff. He feels that the state of his health demands a change of work, and therefore expects to give up the ministry for a time, as soon as his place can be supplied. Mrs. Ella Gibson writes that there are many regrets that this must be.

—Stephen J. Corey has written a statement concerning the expenses of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, to be sent to anyone interested. It answers very admirably some of the criticisms that have been made.

—John C. Hay, who has been doing such good work at Durango, and the region round about, recently visited the South Broadway Christian Church at Denver, Colo., on his way to his home in Los Angeles, Cal.

—The members of our churches in Denver held a union meeting with the Highland Christian Church, who rejoice in the completion of twenty years of independent church life. Its career has been honorable, and its influence has been and is most wholesome.

—Bruce Brown is to assist F. D. Ferrall, of Bloomfield, Iowa, in a meeting in January. Brother Brown's training class at Valparaiso, Ind., for preachers and foreign missionaries, meets during the week at the university, and now numbers 105. Men are going out of this class into the ministry who will be known throughout the brotherhood in a few years.

—J. F. Bennett has been ministering to the brethren at Thayer, Mo., for the past two months and as a result the congregation is growing and the outlook is better in every department. A good Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor and midweek prayer-meeting and a splendid Ladies' Aid is reported. The latter is raising money for State Missions.

—M. L. Blaney, who has gone from Summerside to Charlottetown, P. E. I., says the church there is one of the most intensely interesting in its beginning and the struggles there, from which it is emerging grandly, that he has ever met. They have asked him "to hold the fort till permanent reinforcements may come to do and die, and to such they will give grand support."

—O. P. Spiegel and Mrs. Princess Long are to hold a meeting in the Broadway Christian Church, Los Angeles, Cal., beginning the first Lord's day in January. Brother Spiegel is preaching a series of preparatory sermons each Sunday evening, while resting his body and voice from the incessant strain of evangelistic work which he has been doing on the coast for some months.

—"I have a very high appreciation of the literary excellence and Christian spirit of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Its notes of clear fidelity to the old truths, as against the drift toward rationalism are refreshing to those of us who, while having no sympathy with the spirit of intolerance all too openly shown by some, cherish at the same time a deep love for the cause our fathers contended for."—John Williams.

—S. M. Bernard has had a successful year in Kentucky after his return from Colorado. The church at Madisonville is strong, and during his ministry he has led them in two campaigns, one to build a $30,000 church edifice, and the other resulting in fifty additions in a revival, forty-six of these being adults. Brother Bernard has held three other revivals, resulting in many accessions. He expects to be abroad for several months.

—R. Linton Porter writes that W. D. Cunningham, of Japan, has been lecturing at Baton Rouge, and that the people were very much pleased with him. Brother Porter was once under the impression that Brother Cunningham was an "anti," because of his independent work on the mission field, but he now sees that he is an ardent supporter of organized mission work, and that he has been greatly blessed in his own field.

—E. J. Lampton, of Louisiana, Mo., has addressed an "Open Letter," through the local press, to the members of the Christian church in his town, admonishing them of their duties and responsibilities in a way that ought to prove a blessing to the entire community. If space permitted, we should like to reproduce the entire letter.

—J. Orville Walton, pastor of the Church of Christ at Mt. Pleasant, Mich., has, during this last quarter of the year, been preaching a special series of sermons under the general head, "The Church of Christ." He delivered the Thanksgiving sermon at the union service in the Presbyterian church. It was published in the local paper.

—B. B. Tyler recently spoke, by request, for the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the First United Presbyterian Church, in Denver. Dr. Rankin, the minister, in his weekly calendar said that the ladies were greatly favored in having Dr. Tyler preach the sermon, for "no minister in Denver is more beloved and sought after for such occasions."

—W. S. Priest, writing of one of the series of rallies being conducted by the Foreign Society leaders, says that the one in the Broad Street Church, Columbus, was like a section of a great international convention. The moving pictures, he reports, which is a new feature of the rallies, proved most interesting to a large number of pupils of the day schools and the Bible schools.

—R. N. Simpson is in a meeting with Horace Kingsbury at Harrodsburg, Ky. Brother Simpson is President McGarvey's preacher, and is universally esteemed. Two great mass meetings for men only have been held the last two Sunday afternoons, subjects being "The Steel Framed Man" and "When Sin Has Right of Way." They were held under the auspices of the M. G. Buckner Bible class.

—Hiram College is in the midst of a thirty day campaign to secure the $30,000 necessary to complete the $100,000 endowment. No general appeal is being made, but the friends of Hiram are rallying nobly, and success seems almost assured. Failure to secure the whole before Jan. 1, 1909, will mean a forfeit of a considerable part of the amount already pledged. Up to Dec. 3 this was $73,000.

—Two St. Louis laymen are carrying on a good work at one of the suburbs called Strodtman Heights. Here W. P. Harsh and L. P. Leathers are faithfully endeavoring to build up a church. Already there are sixty members, and the school numbers eighty. Mrs. S. M. Muirheid is a strong factor in the work. There are many places where many of our gifted men not in the regular ministerial ranks might do this kind of work.

—December 20 will be "Peace Sunday." All denominations have expressed their sympathy with the "peace movement" through representatives at the congress held in London during July. The Prime Minister of Great Britain at that time declared the peace movement to be the "greatest of all reforms." It is hoped that ministers everywhere will take advantage of this day to apply the teaching of friendship and good will to the international life.

—We learn that Jesse T. Craig, who has been for four years with the church at Ipava, Ill., will close his work there early in 1909, and that his future field is not yet determined. Brother Craig is one of our substantial ministers and one of the brightest and wittiest, though this might not be guessed from his quiet demeanor. He is a strong writer and his series of "The Elderburg Association," contributed to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was one much enjoyed by a wide circle of readers.

W. R. WARREN, Centennial Secretary, 203 Bissell Block, PITTSBURGH, PA.

—P. A. Cavé, of Charleston, W. Va., preached the union Thanksgiving sermon in the Presbyterian church of that city. In noticing his sermon, the Charleston Gazette says: "The sermon was eloquent and timely, the speaker bringing out clearly the fact that the American people, more than any other, had special reasons for giving thanks for the blessings of the year. The musical service was excellent and the church was crowded, many being forced to stand during the entire service."

—Roy J. Lucas is getting nicely settled in his work at Norfolk, Neb., upon which he entered October 25. A reception was tendered him last week. He preached the sermon at the union Thanksgiving service held at the Baptist church. At present he is the only located minister of the Fourth district of Nebraska, which comprises twelve counties in the northeastern part of the state. Brother Lucas writes that there is certainly an opportunity there, it being a splendid field for pioneer work.

—The Chicago Christian Missionary Society has closed a successful year's work. Parker Stockdale, writing of it, says: "How little do our brethren throughout the country realize the difficulties of mission work in this big city and its importance! The city centers will command the future of our land. We must conquer the city with our magnificent plea. The loss of the city is to lose points of power. A great campaign ought to be inaugurated to stir our brotherhood's interests in city evangelization."

—The fall campaign and the new building at Nelsonville, Ohio, starts off auspiciously. W. S. Cook, the minister, is in his third year, and is preaching to the best audiences of his pastorate. The Bible school still grows, and is the largest that it has ever been at this season of the year, averaging for November over 400. The Rally day brought out 506 and a collection of $150. On November 29 there were 407 in the Sunday school, and seven were added to the membership of the congregation. This church is planning for a meeting in January, with W. H. Boden, of Athens, to do the preaching, and Ida May Hanna to lead the singing.

—Rufus A. Finnell, who is at the Island Church, Wheeling, W. Va., has been asked to furnish a copy of one of his sermons in the Wheeling Daily News every week. This is the most widely circulated paper in West Virginia, and he is, of course, glad to take advantage of such a medium. Everything is moving well with his congregation. The audiences and Bible school are larger than ever before, as also are the receipts. About sixty are enrolled in the men's class, Sept. 1.

—T. B. Larimore has agreed to the publication of a third volume of his "Letters and Sermons," and it has been suggested that it shall be devoted to his work at Mars Hill, and its influence over its students. These are requested to aid by submitting suggestions and by contributing reminiscences; and other contributions of a similar character from his many friends are also sought. It is suggested that those who would like to have this third volume shall at once address Mrs. Emma Page, Room 207, Vendome Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

—The interest demanded the continuation of a special meeting at Davenport, Ia., for another week. S. M. Perkins, the minister, is doing the preaching. Robert E. Henry and W. B. Clemmer, pastors of the churches at Moline and Rock Island, recently visited the Davenport meeting, lending their earnest assistance. With only the "Father of Waters" between these three cities, and with one street car and telephone system, it is pleasant to note that there is close sympathy and readiness for mutual encouragement and assistance among these churches. The Davenport church has just celebrated its sixty-ninth birthday.

—A. McLean's study of Alexander Campbell as a preacher has just been published by Mr. Revell, and costs 25 cents a copy. This is one of the best pieces of writing that Brother McLean has ever done. Close readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will remember that at our suggestion Brother McLean wrote for our special Alexander Campbell number a short article on this subject. He had given it in fuller detail as a lecture. This has been received with great appreciation wherever it has been delivered. We are sure that there will be a large demand for this booklet, which is out in time for the Christmas trade.

—The members of the Christian Tabernacle at Ft. Worth, Tex., have just celebrated Fellowship Day, the occasion being one for the renewal of old acquaintances, and the making of new friendships. In the Sunday-school it was Decision Day. The men of the church served dinner at 1 o'clock, and following this was a season of toasts and round table, and a sacred concert and a social hour. The evening service was evangelistic, and began at five o'clock; the Christian Endeavor followed, and the dismissal was at seven o'clock. We have reecived a copy of the evening program. E. M. Waits is the minister.

—F. M. Rains dedicates the fine new building at Lawrence, Kan., next Lord's day.

—L. L. Carpenter is to dedicate at Altoona, Kan., Dec. 13, and brethren from surrounding churches are cordially invited to attend.

—The quotation from Mr. Campbell, which we make on another page, was written in 1834, when he was 35 years of age. Those who oppose co-operation are accustomed to speak of Mr. Campbell's connection with missionary organizations as belonging to his dotage. But this article settles such a slur once for all.

—DeLoss Smith is going to spend a year or more in the study of voice with the best teachers of New York and Europe, and his permanent address for some time will be 393 Central Park, West, New York City. Brother Smith, of course, needs no introduction to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, for he became widely known through his musical work in the evangelistic campaigns of Brother Scoville. Recently he has been located at Des Moines, Iowa, where he has had a studio besides his regular church work.

—Hiram College is engaged in a strenuous campaign to raise $30,000 in thirty days to realize an addition of $100,000 to its endowment fund. Mr. Carnegie has offered the last $25,000 of $100,000, and there remains $30,000 of the $75,000 to be raised by the college to secure the whole $100,000. This ought not to fail. The friends of Hiram must see to it that it does not fail. Hiram College has made too noble a record to be permitted to fail in this effort. Let the friends of the institution rally to its support in this hour of supreme effort to place it in the way of enlarged usefulness.

—Charles E. Varney and his wife, of Paw Paw, Mich., have entered the evangelistic field, after prayerful consideration of the question. Their time is already engaged up to March 1. Brother Varney, who has been in the lecture field, will retain his connection with the lecture bureau, with the view of assisting him in the support of his meetings. Brother Varney writes that his wife "is a power as a speaker and worker with women." He adds: "I love to preach the great New Testament message." These are the kind of people that succeed in the evangelistic field, and we wish them abundant success in winning people to Christ.

—In another column we give an interesting report of the 105th anniversary of the Central Church at Warren, O. But it is not announced there that one item of interest on this occasion was the action of the church in increasing its minister's salary by $300, and of the men's club in sending him as a delegate to the Congress at Chicago. The Christian Monitor, a little paper issued by the church, states that there never was a spirit of greater enthusiasm than is manifested at present among the congregation. Mr. Lynn is to hold his own meeting in January and will be assisted by Miss Edith Anderson, of Springfield, Ill., as soloist.

—In another column we publish a brief statement from Brother Gill of the after results of the Scoville meeting at Wichita, Kan. The Central Church there now numbers 1,200 members, being by far the largest of our churches in the city. It has doubled in membership since E. W. Allen went there two and one-half years ago, and in this way has reached its Centennial aim. There are additions every Sunday, sixteen being recorded on two recent Sundays. Among the congregations and Sunday-schools of our brotherhood this church ranked fifth in its offerings last year for foreign missions. This is another Centennial aim reached. It is now planning to become a living link in the other societies, and now leads the other churches in the state in the offering for home missions. Of its members, 540 have weekly pledges for the current expenses, aggregating $5,400. There is an active brotherhood of 125 members, a young men's club of 75 members, and a fine Christian Endeavor Society numbering 300. This congregation has erected a tabernacle for the North End Mission, where E. A. Newby has been holding a good meeting, and where the Sunday-school attendance has been over a hundred. Brother Allen has a great church and is doing a fine work.

Dr. Dye in St. Louis.

Dr. Royal J. Dye is to be in St. Louis next week. He will speak at the Hamilton Avenue Church on Sunday morning and Sunday evening, and address a great union service at the First Church on Monday evening, when he will present stereopticon views of the mission work in Central Africa. Dr. Dye is one of our best speakers, and most heroic missionaries. Every member of any church in St. Louis ought to be eager to hear him.

Co-operation in Canada.

On November 24 the Baptist convention of Western Canada passed unanimously the following resolution:

"Whereas, Movements are on foot for the union of Disciples of Christ and Baptists in the East and in the United States; and,

"Whereas, Union between these bodies has been effected in some instances within the bounds of this convention; therefore,

A Unique Anniversary

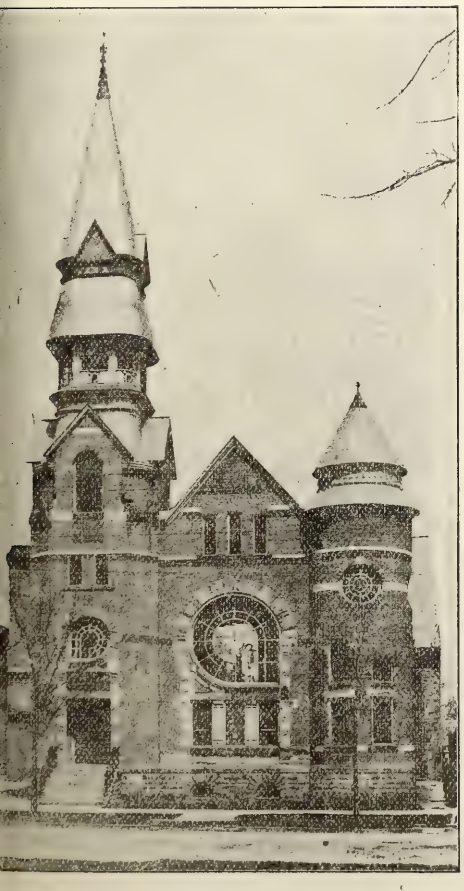
One Hundred and Five Years of Church History.

The Central Christian Church of Warren, Ohio, where J. E. Lynn has ministered for almost five years, celebrated its one hundred and fifth anniversary as a congregation during the week leading up to, and on Sunday, November 8. It proved to be one of the most notable occasions in the long and celebrated history of this famous old church. An anniversary banquet was held November 4, at which time a number of toasts of a reminiscent nature were responded to and an address given by Pres. Miner Lee Bates of Hiram College, a former pastor. Sunday was made home coming day for all former members and pastors, and a large number took advantage of the occasion to go up to their Jerusalem. The Second Church, organized by the Central two years ago, and its pastor, C. O. Reynard, joined in the festivities of the day. A very happy part of the program were the speeches by Baptist and Presbyterian ministers. The Baptist pastor, who appeared as the representative of the Baptist ancestry of the Disciples, was ready to remove the last rail from the division fence that separates the Baptists and Disciples. As representing the Presbyterian ancestry of the Disciples, Dr. Reinhold of that church spoke of the great loss to the Presbyterians occasioned by the withdrawal of such men as the Campbells from their fold.

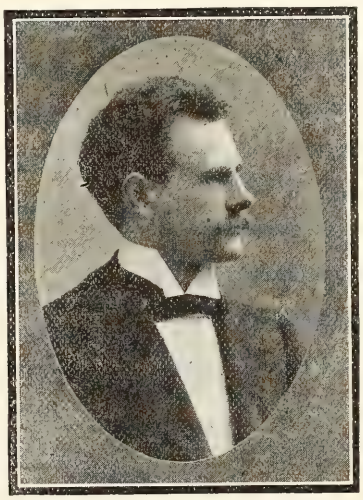
Letters were read from the following, who were unable to be present: J. M. Van Horn, Toronto, Can., J. L. Darsie, New York, N. Y., M. L. Bates, president of Hiram College, all former pastors, and Howard Weir, James Brown and C. S. Medbury, young men of this church who entered the ministry. There were letters, also, from Prof. Chas. Louis Loos, of Lexington, Ky., Henry Christy, Cleveland, Ohio, Miss Mary Johnson, Ft. Wayne, Ind., Mrs. Mary Gross of this city, and Miss Effa Hall Newton.

From the historical address delivered by J. E. Lynn we give the following interesting items concerning the history of this church:

Warren was in earlier years the capital of the Western Reserve of Ohio, the territory of the greater part of the Mahoning Baptist Association, the soil upon which the Reformation first took root. The Central Christian Church at Warren, O., is, therefore, a church of considerable historic interest. It was organized over one hundred years ago, on September 3, 1803, as the Concord Baptist Church. The book containing the minutes of the meeting of organization and the signatures of the seven charter members is now in the possession of the church. It contains the minutes of the official meetings down to 1836. The great name in the first chapter of the congregation's history is that of Adamson Bentley, the pastor for twenty years, from 1811 to 1831. In his farewell discourse, at the end of his long pastorate, he spoke of his "travel from Calvinism to the simplicity of the gospel." In this change which had taken place in the heart of Adamson Bentley, the entire congregation shared. No exact date when the church ceased to be a Baptist church and became simply Christian can be definitely fixed. It was not the work of a day, but a gradual evolution. Certain phrases found in the minutes of those years indicate the process going on. The now famous meeting held by Walter Scott in the winter of 1828 was one of the turning points. This was, in fact, the first meeting held by the reformers in which the New Testament laws of pardon were laid down. True, at New Lisbon, O., the previous November. Mr. Scott had made his first public statement of these laws, but no protracted evangelistic effort was held at that time.



Central Church, Warren, Ohio.



J. E. Lynn.

Mr. Scott came to Warren to "lay siege," as he put it, to the city. The meeting shook the whole community, resulting immediately in fifty confessions, the practical persuading of pastor Bentley to the new view, and great strides forward toward the apostolic teaching on the part of the entire church.

The church has had a number of notable men as her pastors and preachers. Conspicuous among them is the name of Isaac Errett, who was pastor from 1851 to 1856. He was then a young man of thirty-six years. Alexander Campbell, W. K. Pendleton, Chas. Louis Loos, B. A. Hinsdale and James A. Garfield often preached here. J. W. Lanphear was pastor from 1861 to 1865. It was war time. Men needed comfort and strength, and found them in this godly man. There were many young people in the church. Nineteen young men from Miss Lottie Sackett's class went to the front at the first call. This number was later increased to twenty-eight. Many times the services were interrupted by news from the battlefield or the return of the wounded or dying. When peace was restored and the news was brought of Lincoln's assassination, the people came with one accord to this old church and listened to a memorial address by Mr. Lanphear. The church was draped in black and the national colors. George T. Smith and wife went from the pastorate of the church to their work in Japan. During Dr. Thayer's ministry the membership of the church was largely increased. In 1888, while E. B. Wakefield was pastor, the present church building was erected, at a cost of $30,000. Soon after the dedication of the building he accepted a professorship in Hiram College, where his fragrant life has been a continual source of inspiration and power to young men and women. During J. M. Van Horn's eleven years of service, the church was steadily strengthened and built up into a commanding position in the city, and a substantial addition was made to the material equipment by the erection of an exceptionally fine parsonage. Miner Lee Bates, now president of Hiram College, followed with a short but brilliant pastorate.

The history of the church is notable for its even tenure, for the entire absence of dissension and strife, for its high standard of intellectual and spiritual life, for the loyal devotion and hearty co-operation of the entire church with the pastors that have been chosen to lead. The resident membership of the congregation is, in round numbers, one thousand, and constitute a veritable beehive of industry. With the present pastorate dating from 1904, the second century of the church life began. In this pastorate of less than five years, 594 persons have been added to the church. The Second Christian Church has been built, at a cost of $11,000, and has now a flourishing congregation of 350, under the wise leadership of C. O. Reynard, making the Disciples the strongest people in this city. One letter of 216 names was granted to the members who organized the Second Church. In these not quite five years $46.465 has been raised for all purposes. In this amount is included $7,000 of the Second Church building fund. Of the above amount $10,133 was for missions.

No phase of the spiritual life of the church is more assuring than its missionary activity. The church by its regular contributions has been supporting three living link missionaries, one each under the foreign, home and state societies. It is a firmly established rule of the church that all money for current expenses and missionary purposes shall be given, not raised, on the principle that there is always a definite spiritual gain when money is given outright for a good cause which is not secured when the appeal is made to buy a ticket to a supper.

Among the young people of the church who have entered the ministry are C. S. Medbury, Des Moines, Ia., Raymond A. McCorkle, Japan, Eva Raw, China, Howard Weir, Bomansville, Ont., James Brown, Hartford, Mich.

J. E. Lynn.

ANOTHER DIAMOND ANNIVERSARY

An event of special interest to the members of the Christian church of Springfield, Ill., which will be shared by the brotherhood at large, was celebrated on October 4. The fact was reported in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST briefly, but we have had no opportunity to give any space to what is so deserving of a more elaborate report. The seventy-fifth anniversary was fittingly celebrated at the First Christian Church, with a special program. There was a morning and afternoon service, followed with a public reception at which Frederick W. Burnham, pastor, greeted the crowds assembled, while in the evening there was a specially arranged historical and religious program. The record of this is in itself worthy of notice. The church building was tastefully decorated and special music was provided. Brother Burnham's morning subject was "Carrying Forward the Work of the Lord." T. T. Holton presided at the Lord's Supper, and four persons were received into the membership. Judge Charles P. Kane had charge of the rally services, the speakers at which were Mr. Burnham, Mrs. Caroline Beers Kane, who united with the church in 1841, and Mrs. Evaline Elkins, of Mechanicsburg, the only other surviving member of that day. Dr. G. A. Hulett presided. Mrs. Kane spoke of her personal acquaintance with the history of the church, covering a period of almost seventy-five years, mentioning among those who preached in the old days Alexander Graham, Barton W. Stone, Alexander Campbell, Isaac Errett, H. W. Everest and others. In the past it had been the banner church of the state. Mrs. Elkins, who had been a member of the church since the age of fifteen, added a few words. A touching scene was when seventy-five of the small children of the Bible school, under the leadership of Mrs. Ethel Cobb Adams, a daughter of a former minister of the church, marched in and across the platform in front of the two aged ladies, depositing in the laps of each seventy-five white carnations, representing the seventy five years which marked the history of the organization of the church.

Pastor Burnham read a number of letters of greeting from former pastors. E. V. Zollars, president of Oklahoma Christian University, said: "The church has stood like a tower of strength for a pure gospel and for the restoration of primitive Christianity." A. P. Cobb spoke of the unstinted liberality of the church to the unfortunate in the dark days of business depression. J. E. Lynn gave an encouraging word about a new building, saying that after housing the children so well it is but natural and right that the old home should receive attention. C. C. Morrison said the next twenty-five years would reveal the quality of the past seventy-five years as no eulogy can disclose it. He prayed devoutly for such an enrichment of the spiritual life of the congregation that it may face the future wtih the power of Christ and be more effective than ever in the redemption of the city, and "in the guidance of the brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ into those fair uplands of unity and service of which God himself is moon and sun." Those from whom quotations have been made include all the living pastors of the church, with the exception of E. T. Williams and J. B. Briney. After some brief talks two persons united with the church. The West Side and Stuart Street congregations took part in the celebrations, and there was a delegation from the church at Mechanicsburg, accompanied by George T. Smith, its pastor, and one from the church at Cantrall, accompanied by Brother Fisher, its pastor.

The climax of the celebration came in the evening service, which was a memorial session. Mrs. Mary Logan Morrison gave a review of the church's history. H. B. Kane contributed a paper in the nature of reminiscences of the old Sixth and Jefferson street church. Elder Henry C. Latham had a beautiful tribute to the mothers of the church, and Miss Edith Anderson sang most fittingly "Memories of Mother." Mr. Burnham introduced T. T. Holton, a former pastor, whose address covered the period of his ministry. The whole occasion was both sacred and enjoyable, and now, under the leadership of a pastor who is splendidly endowed and has full consecration, the congregation makes a fine start on its way to its own centennial celebration.

With the exception of the holidays they will be on the field in separate campaigns until March 6. M. D. Adams, of India; Dr. James Butchart, of China; Hermon P. Williams and W. H. Hanna, of the Philippines, and H. P. Shaw, of China, will assist them. They are to hold a night mass meeting in each place, showing moving pictures and stereopticon views from the mission fields of the world.

Stockholders' Meeting.

Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Christian Publishing Company will be held at the company's office, 2712 Pine street, St. Louis, Mo., on Tuesday, January 5, 1909, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the election of directors and for the transaction of such other business as may legally come before said meeting.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Some Mountain State Victories.

I recently closed a fine meeting in Sheridan, Wyo., with 146 additions. Among them was the gunner from Dewey's battleship, who fired the shot which sank the Spanish flagship during the battle of Manila Bay. So far as we could learn, this is the greatest meeting ever held in the state. Here is a land of great opportunity. Sheridan now needs another church. If our people had the money to start in the north end of town they would soon have a membership of three or four hundred. O. A. Adams is doing an excellent work, and is highly esteemed by the people.

We have fifty-six additions at Fort Collins, Colo., where I now am. A snow storm and intense cold last week broke us all up. From here I go to Colorado City. J. F. Findley has done wonders with the church here in the last three years. He has given the church a new standing in the community.

Allen Wilson, evangelist.

Fort Collins, Colo.

Nebraska.

A. L. Martin will hold a meeting in his home church at Stamford in December or January, employing a singer to lead the music.—C. F. Rose, of Belvidere, will have C. L. Harbord, of Kansas City, Mo., with him in a meeting at that place in February.—C. S. Alvord, of Lincoln, is supplying regularly at Burchard.—J. L. Stine and Albert Miller have had good audiences at Johnson. Brother Rethemeyer preaches there half time, and will continue.—Samuel Gregg closed at Indianola Nov. 18, and spent a few days with the Red Willow church and began at Dorchester on Nov. 29. The meeting at Indianola has been successful in several ways. Aside from additions to the church they have organized a C. W. B. M., Bible Training Class, Y. P. S. C. E. and a Junior C. E. society. L. B. Cox has been retained for another year.—The secretary spent Nov. 22 at Ulysses, while the pastor supplied for him at Sterling.—A word about the Chester work. It has been reported in the regular way, but I desire to mention it as a remarkable condition and work in several ways. Charles Cobbey has been carrying a heavy school work while preaching for them. He found a substantial church, such as often exists in a small village. Nothing of large import seemed to be in their immediate horizon. A small house and parsonage was the property possession. In a short space of time a fine house has been built and all money therefor subscribed the cost being about $17,000. Added to this, a great meeting, with James Small as evangelist, closed with 71 additions. Twenty new families of standing and influence have been reached. There will be greater things in the future. With such a work accomplished in our midst, why should we despair of doing anything that seems to be indicated in any field? It is true that not every young preacher has the capability or personal qualities of Brother Cobbey, yet each in his own way may do the large things just at hand, if his faith fail not and his zeal and consecration do not flag. It is hard work and continuous endeavor that win in such a battle. Let every small church take heart and go forward, doing its utmost, and it will be a delightful surprise to most of them to discover how far that utmost will lead them.—Good news still comes from the state offerings; Clay Center, $68; Nelson, $41; Virginia, $6; McCook, $10; Odell, $15; Pawnee City, $42; Lincoln (First), $150, Bennet, $13, Beaver Crossing, $8. These are some of the late figures, which are given in round numbers, omitting the odd cents. Remittances have come from a part of these only. Let this work go on and we shall have a showing for our Centennial that will make us all glad.—Harry Mitchell closed at Pleasant Valley and began at Cook.—Word has come to this office indirectly that F. G. Hamm has accepted work in Oregon and gone there.—A good report of the work at York has reached this office. W. E. Brandenburg is the preacher, recently locating in the state. This is most encouraging. York ought to become one of the great churches of the state.—Rising City and Summit both have teacher training classes, in a flourishing condition. A. O. Swartwood is pastor. Late word reports apportionments raised at both places, and much exceeded at Rising City. The work is gaining slowly.

W. A. Baldwin.

Dr. Thompson's Meetings.

Evangelist William Thompson has been holding some good meetings, of which we have received reports from several parties. Elder E. Ketterling and Pastor D. E. Hughes at Monmouth, Ill., write in glowing terms of his work at that place, where there were 183 additions to the church, nearly all of them being adults, and about 90 heads of families. This city is a stronghold of United Presbyterianism. A tent was used, seating about 1,500 people, and it was inadequate to accommodate the Sunday evening throng, while there were large audiences during the week. Brother Hughes says that in a ten years' pastorate at that place, having had many good evangelists to assist him, he has not found a better proclaimer of the faith once delivered to the saints than Dr. Thompson. Miss Bess Prather, clerk of the church at Effingham, Ill., sends a report of Dr. Thompson's meeting there. He was assisted by James Maney, his efficient personal worker. This church is cared for by R. F. Mallot, of Gifford, Ill., who has been very faithful in his work for the congregation. The meeting began under the most adverse circumstances. It is reported that many members of the church were cold and indifferent, but a wonderful spiritual uplift has come, and the congregation enters the open door of greater opportunity, with hearts aflame for the salvation of souls. The number added was 75. The Sunday-school has increased 100 per cent., and all lines of church work are pulsating with energy and activity. The evangelist's lecture on the "Passion Play" entranced a large audience. His departure is said to have been a matter of mutual regret among all Protestant churches in the city, and there is a movement to recall him in the near future.

Berkeley, Cal.

My first pastoral year with the First Church of Berkeley closed in September, and we are happily launched on the second. I find a year's residence here has been necessary to understand this educational center. Around San Francisco, the Bay cities have a total of eight hundred thousand population. The call of the church is to prepare to welcome and care for this influx.

At the center of California, geographically and educationally, where Berkeley is situated, we have two churches. The First Church is only four years removed from dependent support as a mission. Upon my arrival, I found its actual membership to be about 260. Since then 136 persons have been added, in a steady growth. Of these approximately one-third were by primary obedience. The total enrollment to date, therefore, is about 400.

The lack of Sunday laws, skies with an almost perpetual smile, parks and seaside resorts in close proximity, together with other external conditions, made church attendance spasmodic and religious work very difficult. The "call of the wild" is heard and heeded by the multitudes. This church, however, has many choice men and women, with whom it is a joy to labor. They have large vision and a faith that fulfillment will come to this congregation. Hope and good will are manifest at every service, and a substantial growth in missionary offerings is noticeable. The church is aligning itself with all the agencies of reform and benevolence in the community and recognition as a force in its civic and religious life is already at hand. I. N. McCash.

Berkeley, Cal.

The Meeting at Beaumont.

Brethren Lockhart and Garmong have completed their work as evangelists in our city in a most creditable manner. It has been my privilege to labor as pastor with some of the strongest men in our brotherhood, but I have never been with a more consecrated, zealous and spiritual man than Lockhart. While Brother Lockhart has already won an enviable reputation and is being called to our strongest churches for meetings, yet I believe he is just entering a career that will put him in the very front rank of all our splendid evangelists. He is worthy of it and will be able to prove himself in any field.

Conditions were made very unfavorable here by a union meeting, which immediately preceded his coming. Our regular attendance in both Bible school and church services had fallen off at least fifty per cent., but within ten days after he came the work began to improve, and we closed in the joy and gladness of a great victory; 78 made the good confession; 10 came from the Baptists; 18 were received by relation; 25 came from other religious bodies. Of course some of the latter are included in the total of 78 who made confession; 108 came forward in the meeting. The new converts were properly pledged to current expenses; about $1,500 was pledged on our building debt. All departments of the work were strengthened. The work of these men will live long in Beaumont. God bless them!

Lack of Preachers.

I have now finished six months' work in the capacity of evangelist for southern Ohio. I have visited districts 23, 7, 5, 14, 24, 18, 10 and 16. In district twenty-three, I found 18 churches and 8 preachers. In district seven, 19 churches and 2 preachers. In district five there were 17 churches and 10 preachers; in district fourteen, 46 churches and 13 preachers; in district twenty-four, 22 churches and 7 preachers; in district eighteen, 15 churches and not even one located preacher. There are two brethren in this district who preach on Lord's day, but follow callings of another sort through the week, one being a farmer and the other a school teacher. In district ten I found 30 churches and 20 preachers, and in district sixteen 58 churches and 8 preachers reported. In all, we have 242 churches and 72 preachers, in as good a country as there is in the whole state of Ohio, from the standpoint of religious work. I was asked to go into this field and learn its needs and supply them, so far as I can. I think you will all agree that the greatest need is preachers. I believe that with that need supplied all others will be supplied very shortly.

The question, then, is how to get the preachers. I know of no other way than that they are to come from our homes. We must teach our children that the greatest work in the world is the preaching of the Word, and that the first thing in the world is the kingdom of God. I know that my earliest teaching was that I ought to preach, and I have never gotten away from that teaching. In the face of the fact that we have only about half enough preachers to fill our pulpits, ought we not, as disciples of the Christ, to lay it on the hearts of our children that they ought to prepare themselves for the ministry and the mission fields? I can not see how we can hold so earnestly to the great plea of the Disciples of Christ and not be teaching more zealously to our children the fact that the world's greatest need is preachers of the Word. No forward movement requiring a large number of preachers can be made without neglecting many churches already established, but unsupplied with preaching for more than a part of the time, if at all.

There is a great and growing demand in southern Ohio for good men, prepared men, who are ready to come into these communities and locate permanently, or at least for several years. To the man who will do this a respectable salary is assured.

North Baltimore. T. J. White.

Western Pennsylvania.

The divine will is that we "Go Preach." The church will provide necessary funds. There are encouragements and discouragements, but these are the human side. The Centennial should help greatly, and the financial stringency hinders, but the Lord's will is ever all, and his people offer themselves willingly. The appeal for state missions is paramount in our missionary success. The state work is basic. There is the direct contact, every force can be applied more directly because of this. The increase of churches in the state enlarges the possibilities in the foreign and general home missions.

Because of the fundamental characteristics, the state mission work should have the loyal support of every Disciple. Therefore our appeal must be made again and again until it is accomplished. The minister is the man to do this. He can enlist officers to help, but the appeal should go not only to every member but be urged repeatedly until they respond. If the first appeals fails, it is because it needs to be re-enforced with information, facts, truths, and personal appeal, earnest and urgent. A building fund enlists every member, because the appeal is made to appeal to every member.

Western Pennsylvania will enlist every member if the appeal is made to appeal to them. The program of Jesus connects the local and state work by saying, "Ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem and in all Judea." These words spoken to his disciples before there was a church even in Jerusalem made Judea as important in the starting of the work as Jerusalem itself. So we cannot neglect the contiguous territory to our church. If our members move away they are lost to us, unless there is a church where they go. People come to our community, and the chance of winning them is greater when they come from where there was a church. Our own kith and kin are more to us than the heathen and the stranger.

Pennsylvania is of interest to Pennsylvanians. They are first responsible for the preaching of the Gospel to their own, and can only ask the help of others when they have done all they can themselves and have failed to meet the demand. We have failed to meet the demand, but have we done all we can? There are twenty-five places and more where there are Disciples who will help the evangelist to plant the cause whenever he goes to see them. Many of them are earnestly and anxiously appealing to the state society for help.

Only eight states of the Union have a larger population, and only eight states have less area. This compact territory, thickly populated, is a great empire of opportunity.

The sinner is here and is responding to the Gospel wherever we have a church. The churches are growing. The increase since 1905 has been 17.4 per cent. The result of the missionaries' work shows that there was one addition to the church for every $4.70 expended for their support.

The twenty-six counties are only partially evangelized. There is one Disciple to every 113 of the population. But seven counties have no churches and eleven of the county seats. Fifty-five towns and cities of 2,500 and over population have no church. When we consider the large number of people in this small territory it magnifies the greatness of the problem. The great Northwest, embracing ten states, viz.: Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Utah and Colorado, have not as great a combined population by 134,000 persons. The combined membership of the churches in the ten states is 32 618, against only 19,820 in Western Pennsylvania. J. A. Joyce, Cor. Sec.

Texas Christian Lectureship.

We have received the program of this lectureship, which is to be held immediately following the Ministerial Institute in Waco, beginning Monday evening, January 2. A good time is promised all who will attend. Waco and Texas Christian University are adepts at entertaining conventions.

Professor Calhoun, of the Bible College, Lexington, will be chief lecturer, speaking each evening, the following being his subjects: "What Christ May be to a Human Soul;" "The Principles of Scientific Criticism;" "The Supreme Apologetic;" "The Method of Scientific Criticism;" "Historical Problems in Daniel." He is to be reviewed by G. A. Farris, C. M. Schoonover and Chalmers McPherson, and, of course, there will be a discussion. W. T. Hilton, on "Church Polity; Can It Be Improved?" will be reviewed by C. E. Moore; Cephas Shelburne on "Truth and Errors of Christian Science," will be reviewed by A. E. Clinkinbeard; President A. Clarke on "Legal and Spiritual Aspects of Our Plea," will be reviewed by E. E. Crystal; A. C. Parker on "The Growing Church and Ministerial Supply," will be reviewed by E. S. Bledsoe; E. C. Boynton on "The Declaration and Address, Their Relation to Our Present Day Problems," will be reviewed by G. Lyle Smith. There are to be some very helpful devotional sessions, conducted by some of the strongest Texas preachers, and President Lockhart will give some Bible studies on the Psalms. J. J. Morgan, of Fort Worth, is president this year of the lectureship.

From the British Northwest.

Ernest C. Nicholson has located at Portage la Prairie and is entering successfully the pastorate of the Church of Christ. We welcome him to Canada.—Last Sunday was not a day of sunshine, but the Church of Christ in Winnipeg gave $110 to western Canada missions. A few Sundays ago $83.50 was given to Church Extension. It would be difficult to find a band of equal numbers on this continent who could duplicate this offering. We are determined to have one of the best churches in the city by our Centennial. This will require much prayer, work and sacrifice. But now is the time to become established in this gateway city to the golden west. In 1901 Winnipeg had a population of 42,340. The city directory, just out, gives 139,869. Winnipeg will have a half million people within another generation. W. J. Wright has sent word that the American society has voted $5,000 for western Canada, and would render help in establishing churches in Edmonton, Calgary, Regina and other centers. The following figures show the importance of entering these cities:

Population—	1901.	1908.
Edmonton	2,626	20,000
Calgary	4,091	21,000
Brandon	5,620	14,000
Regina	2,249	10,000
Moose Jaw	1,558	8,000
Saskatoon	113	5,600

Geo. H. Stewart, one of our deacons, who has just returned from one of his semi-annual European trips, says he saw Mark Wayne Williams and Leslie W. Morgan in London and reports good progress in our work in the world's metropolis. Frank Coop, president of our English Association, writes that the outlook for New Testament Christianity in England is exceedingly hopeful. He sees sectarianism dying fast at the hands of the denominations and feels that England is the strategic center of missionary operations for us. Brother Coop hopes to have a large British delegation at Pittsburg next October.

I had another call from Archbishop Valette this week. He was excommunicated during the recent trouble in France between Church and State. He is no ordinary priest and he is interested in our movement. He has been reading "Churches of Christ" and other similar books. He tells me that within a few years there will be a great opening in France for an independent New Testament Church of Christ.—J. A. L. Romig is full to overflowing with New Orleans and the great convention. Western Canada will celebrate its Centennial of our movement with a great convention in Portage la Prairie next July. I must congratulate THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on its superb convention number. It is certainly the best I have seen. Ernest C. Mobley.

Winnipeg, Man.

Some After Effects of Scoville's Visit.

E. W. Gill, president of the state Bible school work of Kansas, writing of Brother Scoville's recent meeting with the Central Christian Church at Wichita, in that state, says: "We have had additions every Sunday since he left—ten on last Lord's day, and the finest kind of people. There were four confessions, young married men, whose wives were members. We are still in the meeting. There were fine audiences Sunday, and over 500 at Bible school, with more than $60 in the offering and some still to come. We are having a meeting at the North End Mission now. There were four additions Sunday, and one on Monday night, so you see we are still alive. This meeting has done us a world of good in this city. Our pledges number 526 now, and amount to $102.50 each Sunday. Three weeks ago the offering was $176; two weeks ago, $234; last Sunday, $156. Brother Scoville and his workers helped us do this. Our pastor, E. W. Allen, was called back to Ohio on October 29, to attend his mother's funeral."

Ministerial Exchange.

"I began a meeting at Hebron, Ind., November 30. Any church desiring a meeting can write me there. I can furnish singer."—J. A. Lytle.

The church at Kent, Wash., has no minister. J. P. Shuey, superintendent of missions, has lately visited them and is urging an effort to secure a minister for part or all of the time.

C. M. Hughes, one of our best-known evangelists, will make a special rate for the months of December and January, to those writing him at once. Address 144 Carlisle avenue, Lexington, Ky.

The Central Christian Church of Fairmont, W. Va., is now open for a good man as pastor. Any one desiring to investigate this place may address Seymore McIntire, president church board.

Ira Kimberly would like to hear from some weak church desiring a pastor, who is not afraid to work. He prefers a new section of country. Address him at Atchison, Kan., lock box 54.

The church at Edgar, Neb., will want a man to preach after the first of January. Salary from $700 to $800. Address William Darby.

J. C. B. Stivers, 9411 Lamont avenue, Cleveland, O., can be secured for evangelistic work in January or February. He has had a successful experience in this line of work, as well as with some of our best churches as pastor.

The Christian Church at Royntown, Mo., is without a pastor for next year. A young man is preferred. Correspondence may be addressed to W. H. Nicholson, clerk.

Della F. Cheney, song evangelist, Mt. Pleasant, Ia., is available for meetings in January and February.

Charles E. McVay will sing for the church at Mason City Ia., in February. For later dates address him at his new home, Ruskin, Neb.

"I have open dates for January and February as musical director. Address me at Bethany, Mo."—Mayme Eisenbarger, singer.

Owing to a cancelled engagement Miss Lida B. Seamands, singing evangelist, 217 Labban street, Warrensburg, Mo., has time for one meeting before the holidays.

"I can serve some church one-half time and can begin at once. Good experience in the work. Good references given. Some church can have good services at reasonable cost."—Henry B. Easterling, 1216 North College street, Decatur, Illinois.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Fort Smith, Dec. 3.—There have been two baptisms—one reclaimed and six added by letter. We have a teacher training class of 75.—Edward B. Bagby.

Winslow, Dec. 4.—One confession and one by statement at Chester, Ark. The work at both Chester and Winslow has taken on new life.—J. D. Curtis.

Georgia.

Fitzgerald, Nov. 29.—Two received into fellowship to-day—one by confession and baptism, and one by letter.—E. Everett Hollingworth.

Idaho.

Boise, Nov. 27.—The Clark family have just closed the greatest meeting in the history of Idaho, at Twin Falls, resulting in 137 additions. Ray Beaucamp is the pastor. They are now starting a meeting at Nampa, where B. F. Clay has been working faithfully in preparation. Brother Clay had six additions recently. We are working at a schoolhouse near Parma. Quite a number have signified their intention to unite. We expect to organize.—Frank E. Jones, corresponding secretary.

Iowa.

Albia, Nov. 28.—We closed a fine meeting with the Drakeville church November 26, with 32 additions from all sources—26 by confession and baptism, two reclaimed, one by letter, one by statement, one from the Baptists and one from the Congregationalists. Sister A. M. Sea is their beloved minister. She is a strong preacher and personal worker. Batavia next, Packwood, and then Eldon, Ia.—B. W. Pettit.

North English, Dec. 3.—We closed a two-weeks' meeting here with home forces November 29, with six added—five by confession and baptism and one by letter. This is the third meeting held by the pastor for this church in two years. We expect to close the year free of debt and money in treasury of every department.—J. C. Hanna, pastor.

Nora Springs, Dec. 3.—While V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka, Kan., was associated with me as singer during a few meetings this fall there were 143 additions. His presence insures a success in the music, both in the congregational singing and solo work, and with his congenial spirit any church or preacher will be glad to have him. Two confessions at the beginning of this meeting. Splendid attendance.—J. L. Wilkinson.

Illinois.

Prentice, Nov. 27.—I just closed a four-weeks' meeting at Berea Church (Prentice P. O., Morgan county, Illinois). This church was dead for many years until four years ago when C. E. French, now of Tallula, Ill., resurrected it. I found 43 members and 35 were added during the meeting—33 baptisms and 20 of the number were young men. I am to preach for them half time.—C. G. Cantrell.

Eureka, Nov. 30.—On November 4 the writer began a meeting with the Antioch church, in Morgan county, Illinois. We continued 18 days, there being 38 additions—32 by confession, four from the Baptists and two by statement. I am now in a meeting with Brother David Lindsay and the church at Deer Creek, Ill.—J. W. Camp.

Table Grove, Dec. 1.—Brooks brothers, evangelists, just closed a great meeting here. To date there have been 46 additions, and others will come through the efforts of local forces under the guidance of Fred S. Nichols, who has been pastor for the last two years. The meeting was concluded by a recention to new members and the ordination of two elders and three deacons to the already efficient board. Elder Craig, of Ipava Church, assisted in the ordination services. Considering the difficulty of the field here this has been a most signal victory for the cause of Christ, and the church re-enters the field with bright prospects.

Latham, Dec. 1.—During the month of November there were two additions to the church here by letter.—Clifford S. Weaver.

Hartsburg, Nov. 29.—Z. M. Brubeck, evangelist, and C. B. Hanger, song leader, have been with us a few days in revival meetings. There were seven additions. These brethren have made a deep impression on the community.—G. M. Goode.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Frank A. Sword and Edward O. Beyer, began a meeting with D. F. Seyster at Lenark, Ill., November 15. In spite of unfavorable weather, great interest is being manifested. With Brother Sword's clear and forceful presentation of the gospel we expect to hear many confess Christ as the Son of God and their Saviour.—E. O. B.

Palmyra, Dec. 5.—I am here leading the singing in a union meeting. All of the church choirs are helping me in the music and we have a fine orchestra. We are having Christian union as far as singing the gospel is concerned. Brother Cummings is the new pastor of the Christian Church. He preaches here every two weeks. We continue our meeting here until December 22.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Youngstown, Nov. 23.—After a good meeting held by our pastor, George F. Chandler, we can report that 14 came forward—10 by confession, 13 by baptism and three from other religious bodies. The church was revived and the community deeply stirred.—Elder J. W. McMahill.

Indiana.

Tampico, Nov. 27.—I closed a splendid meeting at Honeytown, Ind., with 22 additions—18 by confession and baptism, two from other denominations and two reclaimed. Closed with good interest and a crowded house.—Jesse C. Reynolds, minister.

Milroy, Dec. 1.—Fred R. Davies, of Charleston, closed a four-weeks' meeting here with 16 accessions—nine by confession and seven by statement. Brother Davies's preaching was earnest and practical and all his work was highly appreciated.—D. H. Patterson.

Delphi, Nov. 30.—Meeting closed on account of scarlet fever epidemic—17 added. We were on the threshold of a great ingathering. Evangelist T. J. Legg gave universal satisfaction, as is his custom, and his strong, clear, doctrinal sermons have made a permanent impression on the church and community. Mrs. Lola Culver is exceptionally competent as music director and soloist, and the most tireless personal worker I have known.—A. A. Honeywell, pastor.

Farmersburg, Dec. 6.—We closed a short meeting here last night with four added—two by baptism and two from the Baptists.—Leonard V. Barbre, pastor.

Fort Wayne, Dec. 3.—Closed evangelistic service with the First Christian Church here last evening. Forty-three were added—nearly all confessions. The church was greatly encouraged and strengthened. H. E. Stafford, the pastor, is doing a noble and unselfish work here. Urgent engagements called me home, so the pastor will continue the meeting over Sunday.—L. C. Howe.

Anderson, Nov. 30.—J. C. Vinson, of Gas City, and myself, closed the most successful meeting at Dora, Wabash county, Indiana, since the days when ex-Governor Chase, some thirty years ago, stirred that people so mightily. The church is greatly strengthened and the Sunday-school doubled. A large chorus and ten baptisms are the immediate results of the meeting. This church is the home of the Minicks—Harry and Frank—ministers among us, whose godly parents yet live and worship there. I am open to work with other ministers.—Chester Shaul, 1924 Sheridan street.

Niantic, Nov. 27.—One man made the good confession here last Lord's day. Seventy-five dollars and fifty four cents was contributed to anti-saloon league.—J. Will Walters.

Kansas.

Fredonia, Nov. 30.—Just closed my second meeting here with 44 additions, making in all 304 additions here this year in my two meetings with H. M. Johnstone. The crowds and interest were greater in the second meeting than in the first. I go to Garnett next, then in January to Eureka, and in February to Blackwell, Okla. Ministers and churches may address me, Richard Martin, 160 Pierce avenue, care of Martin family.

Syracuse, Dec. 2.—Evangelist S. S. McGill, of Kinsley, Kan., began a series of meetings with us on November 8, continuing until November 29. While the audiences were not the largest the interest was great. Five were added by confession and baptism—four young ladies and one young man. The whole congregation has been greatly benefited and inspired to greater loyalty to the cause. Brother McGill's plain and forceful presentation of the message can not help but win souls to Christ. We expect to have him return to this place some time in the near future to hold another meeting. The music was under the direction of Sister Goodloe, whose solos are so inspiring.—C. H. Anderson.

Great Bend, Dec 30.—Meeting growing in interest. Additions coming every night—19 added to date. This is the hardest field I have had for some time. The Methodist Episcopals are also having a meeting.—Ingle, Fuller and Zimmerman.

Burr Oak, Nov. 30.—I am in a meeting here with D. W. Campbell. Splendid crowds and interest.—Mayme Eisenbarger, musical director.

Kentucky.

Harrodsburg, Nov. 29.—Twenty-six to-day, 47 to date. Meeting eight days old. Robert N. Simpson, of Lexington, preaching the old gospel with power. God is adding his blessing.—Horace Kingsbury, minister.

Massachusetts.

Boston, Nov. 29.—D. L. Martin is preaching for us regularly and working earnestly. Two additions in October by letter, five by confession and baptism this month, and good prospects for next month. Chinese Sunday-school prosperous. Eighty-nine at Chinese Thanksgiving dinner in our church. Peace prevails and harmony abounds.

Minnesota.

Minneapolis, Dec. 1.—We closed a two-weeks' meeting with home forces in the Grand Avenue Church, November 22. There were 18 added—11 confessions. Ten were added the last day.—T. J. Dow.

Missouri.

Kansas City, Nov. 22.—The Hamilton-Thomas revival, held at the Hyde Park Church, closed to-day. There were 81 additions. We have had 145 new members added at Hyde Park since January 1. The evangelists, sincere and capable, have gone to Chanute, Kan.—Louis S. Cupp, pastor.

Springfield, Nov. 29.—The pastor, F. F. Walters, is leading the forces in a meeting, largely attended, in the Central Church. L. D. Sprague is conducting the music. Many have been added.

Bethany, Nov. 30.—I assisted the minister, Andrew P. Johnson, in a two-weeks' meeting. We closed with seven accessions in all. The field was well gleaned as Evangelist Lockhart held a meeting here last year, with a very large ingathering. Brother Johnson is an able evangelist and lecturer, as well. My song recital given during the meeting was well attended. I leave here at once to sing at Palmyra, Ill.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Sedalia, Nov. 24.—I have just closed a two-weeks' meeting with home forces here. There were nine baptized and five received by letter,

BIBLE INSTITUTE.

To the Bible Student:

It may be your duty to

PREACH

the unfathomed riches of Christ. The poignant need for preachers is a divine call to spiritual men who love God and to enter the ministry, to endure hardship for Christ and the lost, to become filled with the Bible,

THE STRONGEST FORCE

for the salvation of the lost. If too old to take a regular course, investigate the one year's residence plan of the Pastor's College. Send for catalog. The ministry is the best and most joyous calling and the Disciples are noted for their lucid unfolding of the sacred Word. We offer a synthetic survey of the whole Bible, in ten lectures and ten charts. Some churches have paid $100 for such a course and felt repaid. This Bible Institute conserves the best ideas of the Campells, adds some later, cleaves to the view of the Old Testament held by the Master and is as wide awake as the 20th Century.

THE PASTOR

can use this Institute (1) as a course of lectures, with its appeal to both Eyegate and Eargate, thus making the Book new to many. (2) As a solid, instructive introduction to a protracted meeting. (3) As a basis for weekly expositions, covering the Bible in three years.

THE EVANGELIST

will find it full of meat. It gives a clear understanding of the Bible as a unit, its plan, purpose and power; it brings out the strong evidence of prophecy; points out the inspired way of salvation; convicts of sin and of the absolute dependence on Christ; gives the true platform and method of Christian union; demonstrates the impregnable strength of our position and maps out the certain destiny of every hearer ought to have this Institute for the abundance of deep truths by which we have won our victories, for the five books which lead to profitable and pleasant Bible study, for a graded road to the ministry. He can soon learn to preach, then support himself in school.

A minister wrote: "Your ideas are grand for the advanced minister—but can the young men understand?" It is the triumph of the teacher to bring the deepest ideas within the grasp of the student. However, when writing for circular, ask for a copy of our "Sublimest Drama of the Ages." If you can appreciate and enjoy the profoundest truths that ever thrilled the angels to wonder and to song, you can safely order the Institute.

making 30 added since beginning of the present pastorate, and the work gradually assuming more hopeful and satisfactory relations.—A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor First Christian Church.

Warrensburg, Dec. 4.—Evangelists Snively and Altheide are preaching and singing the gospel to gret audiences here. There have been nine additions already. George B. Stewart, the pastor, is very popular.

Springfield, Dec. 4.—Just closed a four- weeks' meeting at Blairstown, Mo., with 36 added—19 by confession and 17 otherwise. The church was doubled in membership and strengthened financially. W. S. Hood, the pastor, had 20 additions before I reached the scene. F. M. O'Neal and wife led the music to the delight of all.—Joseph Gaylor.

Kirksville, Dec. 6.—Two baptisms at Union, Shelby county since last report, and funeral of E. M. Crow, of Clarence, and James G. Roy, of Hagers Grove.—D. M. Kinter.

Jasper, Dec. 4—I am in a fine meeting here with 16 added in two weeks—11 conversions. Brother and Sister Allen are earnest co-workers. There have been a total of 1,018 additions in my eight years' ministery.—E. H. Williamson, evangelist, Springfield, Mo.

Nebraska.

Bethany, Dec. 1.—Closed a meeting at Cheney, Kan., where H. J. Myers is minister, resulting in 100 additions. I go to Osborne, Kan., next. Churches wanting meetings may address me there. —Edward Clutter, evangelist.

New Mexico.

East Las Vegas, Dec. 1.—Three have been added to our congregation during the month of November. We have made very material progress in various other ways, and the work is growing in strength and favor. It is our plan to have this young congregation comfortably housed by the close of 1909.—Meade Ervin Dutt, A. C. M. S., minister.

Ohio.

Paulding, Nov. 24.—Three baptisms last Sunday night and one other some weeks ago not reported. Our training classes seem to be progressing nicely. —W. D. Trumbull.

Marion, Dec. 3.—Two fine additions to membership November 29, a steady increase in the Bible school, and also in regular church services. Last Sunday night the Bible school held its children's day program for home missions and it was the finest the writer has ever seen. Our union teacher training class maintains a splendid interest.—Charles E. Smith, minister Firs. Church.

Oklahoma.

Pondcreek, Nov. 30.—Five additions this month —one hundred and nineteen during the past eighteen months. Thus far I have held my own meetings. G. J. Chapman, of Cherokee, and Miss Mattie Wofford, of Enid, begin a meeting here tonight.—O. L. Lyon, minister.

Enid, Nov. 28.—Evangelist Chas. P. Murphy, of Frederick, Okla., held a good meeting at Buxton, Kan., with several added. Any church desiring a meeting would do well to write him at Frederick. His next meeting will be at Ft. Cobb, Okla., Dec. 3.

Perkins, Dec. 2.—We have just returned from Covington, Okla., where we held a short meeting, resulting as follows: Four baptisms, five from other bodies and four by relation.—J. W. Garner.

Elk City, Dec. 1.—Eleven added in two months of work, audiences doubled, prayer-meeting restored and a teacher training class organized.—J. M. Blalock.

Perkins, Nov. 27.—On November 8 we entered into a revival meeting with Evangelist Beach and wife, of Anadarko, Okla., which closed last night with nine added—four confessions, three from other religious bodies, one reclaimed and one by statement. This church has been without a pastor for some time and conditions for a meeting were not the best. We issued a revival bulletin and other means of advertising the services. Any church calling Brother and Sister Beach for a meeting will make no mistake. They left for Coyle, Okla., where they hold their next meeting. —G. P. Clark, pastor.

Sporty Nib's New Pup.

Mr. Sporty Nibs bought a Setter Pup at the Dog Show, and with manly pride assured the family that "Tige" was an all-round house-dog as well as prize hunter.

The first night Tige kept the household and neighborhood awake by howling and whining in his strange kennel, and to relieve the tension Mr. Nibs crawled out in the early morning hours and shut the dog in the kitchen with a bone to take his mind off "his lonesomeness."

Ten minutes later wild shrieks from the cook and fierce barking by Tige routed the family from their beds, to find the cook trembling in a corner while Tige was evidently trying to eat up the gas range. Seizing the dog by the collar, Nibs dragged him away, but breaking loose, Tige returned to his ferocious attack upon the oven-doors. Then light dawned upon Nibs; Tige was trying to whip another dog, the counterpart of himself, reflected in the shining surface of the range, and the maid explained that she had used X-Ray Stove Polish the day before—until it shone like a mirror—and Tige wasn't so much to blame after all for tackling the supposed intruder.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

THOSE TO WHOM WE OWE THE GREATEST DEBT.

Topic, December 16.—Philemon 16.

This little letter to Philemon is a revelation of the intimacies of the great apostle. See how he calls the names of his friends—his fellow prisoners, fellow workers, fellow soldiers—Timothy, Onesimus, Epaphras, Mark, Aristarchus, Demas, Luke, Appia, "our sister," Archippus, a "fellow soldier." How all rejoiced in his friendships, and even found place for praise in his bonds! He calls himself the bond-servant of Jesus Christ and puts himself in the same class with Onesimus, the slave of Philemon, his friend, whom he calls a "brother beloved," and asks that he be received as such.

This brief epistle shows the rich humanity of Paul. He was rich in his friendships. He was happy in his memories. He cherished his fellow workers with a tender affection. He looked forward to sharing their hospitality with genuine pleasure. Paul was a social being, as his letters abundantly testify. He was never too busy to write a letter to a brother and fellow worker in the gospel. Even trivial things claimed his attention for the time and received his earnest consideration. He was unfailing in his courtesies. The love of Christ constrained him in little things as in large things. And his real greatness is shown in all this, not less than in his faithfulness in his ministry.

What Paul calls the "fellowship of the faith" was a very dear and delightful thing to him. His prayers were fragrant with thanksgiving for the high privileges that were his, in common with his fellow servants. And in this he is an example to all that serve in the gospel of God's Son, whether in high or in humble places. And truly, nothing reveals the real greatness of any man more than his appreciation of his fellow workers, however humble they may be. The church and the world owe a debt of gratitude that can never be paid to such men as Paul, the apostle and servant of Jesus Christ, and to such as him; men who hazarded their lives for the gospel which they preached with such forgetfulness of self and such sacrifice of all those things which men most prize in this life. Literally they made themselves of no reputation, like the Master whom they served. Paul says of himself that he "counted all things but as refuse for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus the Lord, for whom he suffered the loss of all things;" yet what was loss to him he accounted gain for Christ, and for those whom he sought to save. He truly became all things to all men, if by any means he might win some. These were the heroic souls—Paul and his humbler disciples and fellow helpers—who accounted not their lives dear unto themselves that they might finish their course with joy and the ministry which they had received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

"Others have labored and we have entered into their labors." And the debt we owe to those who have gone before us is beyond all estimate. It was Paul and his fellow workers who first preached the gospel in Europe. So, in a very peculiar sense, we owe our inheritance of grace and fellowship of faith to them. But for Paul's obedience to the heavenly vision which appeared to him in the man of Macedonia, beckoning to him and saying, "come over and help us," the whole history of Europe, which is largely the history of the world for the past nineteen centuries, might have been changed. The debt of modern nations to Paul and his co-workers is written large on the pages of history. And that debt is growing with the spread of the gospel in all the world. Paul counted himself debtor to both Jews and Gentiles, and has made all mankind his debtor by reason of the gospel which he preached, as we believe, with the power of the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Adult Bible Classes.

The interest in the adult Bible class movement is widespread, as is witnessed by the following report from W. C. Pearce, international superintendent of adult Bible class work.

We, as a people, are having a fine share in it, as is evident from this word from J. H. Hardin, state superintendent of adult work in Missouri for the International Association, as well as for our own work. Brother Hardin reports up to date, 69 organized adult classes in Missouri that have received the international certificate of recognition. Of these 50 are in our own schools.

The following report from W. C. Pearce gives the situation only up to September 25, the close of the third quarter of 1908.

Chicago, November 30, 1908.

My Dear Brother:

Enclosed please find statement showing the number of international certificates of recognition issued by the various associations during the quarter ending September 25. Also a statement by denominations showing total number of classes receiving certificates and their membership up to September 25, 1908. From a study of these statements may I ask your consideration of the following:

1. The total membership of the 2,152 classes is 70,802, or an average of 33 per class. As these figures were given at the time of organization or enrollment no doubt the membership is much larger now. One association recently gathered statistics from 100 of these classes and found their membership had increased in one year nearly 100 per cent. If this ratio of increase has prevailed throughout the field the 2,152 classes now have a membership of over 140,000. This is a most hopeful indication and I trust will encourage you to plan a systematic campaign for reaching even greater numbers of men and women.

2. Thirty-four associations report certificates issued during the past quarter. Four report for the first time: Delaware, Minnesota, Mississippi and Wyoming. The adult department circle is rapidly widening; soon it will include the entire continent, and eventually the whole world.

3. In the statement by denominations you will notice 29 denominations are included in addition to the unclassified list. We certainly should be encouraged to know that so many denominations are represented in this movement.

4. Much progress is being reported in the work of organizing these classes into adult departments in connection with township, county and city associations. The adult departments of the Toronto and Ontario associations have just held a banquet which was attended by 1,250 men. This is an evidence of the willingness of the classes to co-operate in the general adult Bible class movement, and the advantage of a united movement.

Please remember that I am always glad to hear from you concerning any feature of your work or as to anything I can do to help you. Wishing you abundant success and blessing, I am Yours most sincerely, W. C. Pearce.

Standard of Organization for Adult Bible Classes.

1. The class shall be definitely connected with some Sunday-school.

2. The class shall have the following officers: Teacher, President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer. It shall also have at least three standing committees, as follows: Membership, Devotional, and Social. It is not required that these committees be known by these particular names, but that the class have three committees which are responsible for these three kinds of work.

3. The class shall consist of members who are sixteen years of age or over.

Any Bible class meeting this standard, upon application to their State or Provincial Association, and furnishing the names and addresses of class teacher and president, with 25 cents, will receive an International Certificate of Recognition.

Our Own Organized Adult Bible Classes.

The following report is just received from J. A. Scott, the secretary of our own National Christian Bible School Association, giving the organized adult classes in our church which reported their organization and received the international certificate of recognition the third quarter of this year, 1908. Two previous reports have been published in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, one in the issue of August 20, for the first quarter of the year, and a second report in the issue of November 5, for the second quarter.

Doubtless there are hundreds more of our classes that might receive the international certificate of recognition, if they would. See the standard of organization at the head of the page, and bring your class into line, report it to your state superintendent of adult work, or to your own state Bible school man. If you do not know who these officials are drop us a card of inquiry.

Organize and report. Let us add all our influence to this great work.

TEACHER TRAINING.

De Pew is After You.

Clarence L. De Pew, the untiring and never-resting state Bible school superintendent of Illinois, has made up his mind to have a teacher training class in every school in the state. When he finishes his task the only schools without training classes will be dead ones.

Here are a number of schools that up to date have not fallen into line. They are coming, one by one, but why not come faster? By the first of January every school that is alive should have a class in operation. It is not the size of the school, nor its location in a favored community, nor an expert teacher, that makes a class possible, but just simple, patient, persevering determination on the part of just one person who feels it must be done. Are you that person?

If you have any friend in this list, and have a class in your own school, write them a letter and tell them what it has done for your school, and how you did it. Let us help De Pew bring these schools into line.

Studying the Bible With Enthusiasm.

My class will finish parts one and two of the Teacher Training Handbook soon and we will then be ready for an examination. There are about eighty in the class.

In regard to the work so far, I will say that it fills a long felt want with us as a people. One man in my class said he had gotten more out of the Bible in this short time than he had for the last five years. One of the strong points in the book is that one can not get a lesson clearly until he has read the actual contents of the Bible.

My class is studying the Bible with enthusiasm. We are having some good times in our study.

People's Forum

"Who Shall Decide?"

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

The venerable W. T. Moore, with his usual "fascinating sense of humor," struck a keynote when he pressed his pen into the "People's Forum" recently with the following interrogation: "Who shall decide?" Why my mind and that of Brother Moore should have run along in the same channel is a strange parallel coincidence, but he is yet a young man for the reason that he does not claim to have shaken hands with George Washington and other notables of that day, though, like the Father of his Country, he does believe in liberty.

Some of our religious papers are really in too serious a mood. With one of my peculiar nervous temperament I am kept wondering as to what will happen next. But John Calvin was a very serious man. His ambition was to "defend his Lord and not disown his cause." He saw in Servetus a shameful enemy. With flowing robes and solemn pomp a fire was kindled. It nearly fills me with horror to contemplate that dreadful scene. Servetus was a heretic and Calvin possessed the power to make him pay the physical penalty by committing his body to the torturing flames! History has been rather quiet as to the closing incidents surrounding the execution of Servetus, but I have always supposed that Calvin went back into the little chapel and condemned the cynical attitude of the Pharisee who thanked the Lord that he was not like the poor Publican, then repeated with the congregation the Doxology and pronounced the Benediction. According to present ideals, which, think you, of the two will be permitted to pass a cup of cold water to the other across the impassable gulf? Servetus had a fine sense of humor or he could not have endured the taunts of his oppressor. It was a place where logic and humor met and could not be reconciled. Logic is exact, and, deprived of its antidote, this sense of humor that caused the "heretic" to open his eyes to the future and see a time when he and his oppressor would be in strangely different attitudes.

I have recently read a great deal from "Interested Brethren." Where those are that are not interested I do not know. The seriousness of some of their assertions is pathetic. Those that have expressed themselves seem to be unanimous, that—

> "The world is going bad,
> Unless we right it;
> And heaven will be sad,
> If we miss it."

The saddest of all sad words of tongue or pen and the most solemn and strange coincidence, the one that out-coincidences any coincidence, the one that co-ordinates with all the ordinary and extraordinary incidences that have crossed our threshold of progress, is that our missionary interests are to be made to suffer. I think we should stop here and read the whole book of Lamentations, for something must be done to thwart the overthrow of all our missionary enterprises. To have them collapse at the beginning of this, our Centennial year, would make us the jest of all the world-wide enterprises.

My memory is not very good, but I remember to have read somewhere selections from one of the "interested brethren" that were not exactly poetic, but they read more like his pen had been dipped in the fluid of an adder's sting. As I now remember, he felt his task to be of immense importance to the cause of missions, and the effort put forth was almost superhuman. That pen was not driven very far, sad for the pen, till it struck a "Scotchman," and came to grief. It was supposed that the Scotchman was asleep. A small sailing vessel had struck a huge sea monster. The little craft rushed for shelter. The "Uninterested Brethren" have kept quiet. Where there is so much noise and smoke there must be some firing, but the guns are of the smooth bore, short range variety. The humor of the situation is apparent. If our missionary interests be of God and infused with the spirit of the Great Commission, how can the little pens of the "interested brethren" affect them? "O, ye of little faith!" R. L. (Bob) Wilson.

Reality and Utility of Miracles.

and that, too, in the form of the miraculous? Nicodemus reasoned well when he said to Jesus, "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do these signs that thou doest except God be with him." It was by the power of similar "signs," or miracles, at testing the mission of Moses as a messenger from God that the Egyptian magicians were compelled to exclaim, "This is the finger of God." No wonder therefore that Jesus should say, "The works that the Father hath given me to accomplish, the very works that I do bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me"; and that the inspired John should say, "Many other signs, therefore, did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that believing you may have life in his name."

Of precisely the same significance were the miracles that were wrought by the apostles under the divine power of the selfsame spirit that dwelt in their Master. Notice, for example, the effects produced by the miraculous healing of the "impotent man," by Peter and John at the "Beautiful Gate of the Temple." It was universally known in Jerusalem that this man was born a cripple, and had lived for forty years a helpless object of charity. And when he was seen by all the people with Peter and John in the Temple "walking and leaping and praising God," they were "filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him." And when Peter proceeded to connect this event with the testimony of God concerning his Son, important results immediately followed. In the first place the miracle not only increased the number of believers from 3,000 to 5,000, but forced from the lips of unbelievers the unwilling acknowledgment of its own reality. They said, "What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been wrought through them, is manifest to all that dwell in Jerusalem, and we can not deny it." In the second place it undeniably demonstrated that "the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth," so far from having perished from the earth through the crucifixion, had been glorified through the resurrection and exalted above all other names, as "the only name under heaven that is given among men whereby we must be saved."

Largest Flower in the World.

Can you imagine a blossom as large as a carriage wheel? On the island of Mindanao, one of the Philippine group, was found by some explorers such a flower, says a writer.

Far up on the mountain of Parag, 2,500 feet above the sea level, some explorers were wandering, when they came across some buds larger than gigantic cabbage heads.

Greatly astonished, they searched further, and presently discovered a full-blown blossom, five petaled, and three feet in diameter. It was carried on low-lying, luxuriant vines.

The natives call it bolo. It was found impossible to preserve it fresh, so they photographed it, and kept some dried petals to press, and by improvised scales found that a single flower weighed twenty-two pounds.

It was afterward found to be a species of Rafflesia, first found in Sumatra, named after Sir Stamford Raffles. The new flower was called Rafflesia Schadenburgia, in honor of its discoverer, Dr. Schadenburg.

There is a story of an atheist's child who had learned something about God. The father wished to expunge the thought from her mind and wrote on a piece of paper: "God is nowhere." He asked the child to read the words, and she spelled out: "God is now here." The child's unconscious misreading of the atheist's creed startled him and brought him to the feet of God whose existence he had sought to deny. Wherever we are, we are in the presence of God.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

Eastern Proverbs.

Let a man speak what is true, and speak what is pleasing; let him not speak what is true but unpleasing, nor what is pleasing but untrue. This law changes not.

No other reaps the fruit of a deed which a man commits in this world of men; the fruit of every deed which a man commits, he shall reap, and no deed whatsoever goes without its fruit.

Thou thinkest thyself alone and reckest not of the ancient wise one sitting in the heart; in his presence thou sinnest who knoweth the evil deed.

In the true light seek thou the little master of the house within, while thou holdest in check the wind blowing before the door and the leader of the senses. Why many words? Through words a man cometh not to vision. Behold the master within the body! Why wanderest thou further in the darkness of errors taught by the books?

After much search in many doctrines the wise have determined the four ways of giving that lead to welfare in this world and the next. To those who fear shall a man give confidence; to the sick, medicine; to those that desire knowledge he shall give knowledge; to the hungry, food.

Do not unto others that which would offend thee; this is the sum of the law, and every other law alters with occasion.

Courtship in Ireland.

"You're too young to mary yet, Mary," the mother said, when Mary pleaded that she should grant Laurence O'Mahoney a particular boon.

"If you only have patience, mother, I'll cure myself of that fault," was Mary's reply.

"And she's never been used to work, Laurence," the mother said to the suitor, discouragingly.

"If you only have patience, ma'am," was Laurence's reply to this, "I'll cure her of that fault." And he did, too.—Lippincott's.

"If you want to be comfortable and prosperous," said the man who takes a friendly interest in everybody, "you should go to bed with the chickens."

"Deed, boss," answered Mr. Rastus Pinkley, "in dis yere tired kin' o' weather dem chickens don' go to bed early 'nuff to suit me."—Washington Star.

THE LIFE OF MAN.

"The life of man
Is an arrow's flight,
Out of darkness
Into light,
And out of light
Into darkness again;
Perhaps to pleasure,
Perhaps to pain.

"There must be something,
Above or below;
Somewhere unseen
A mighty Bow,
A Hand that tires not,
A sleepless Eye
That sees the arrows
Fly and fly;
One who knows
Why we live—and die."
—Richard Henry Stoddard.

An Old, Old Question.

There is one question that has bothered the sages of all ages and it is bothering them still. The question is, why will young men get drunk? If there is any benefit to be derived therefrom it has never been made known, and if there is any good connected with any act performed under the influence of liquor we have never heard of it.

To be a young man means something. The possibilities of his life are many and the fruitage can be of great worth to himself as well as to others. Why he seeks to dethrone his reason, despoil his character and foil every noble aspiration he ever entertained is a wonder to every one who studies the condition of his life. Why fondle a poison, why seek the company of a dragon and court the company of a serpent when he knows the mission of all these is to destroy and finally kill. Young man, arise in the strength of thy manhood and be a man, a complete man. There are too many dwarfs, too many foiled hopes, too many broken hearts and too many disrupted homes for us to keep still, and, there are too many young lives placed on the altar of sacrifice, yea, even one life is worth more than all the ruinous agencies combined. Shun the very appearance of evil. Be a man. Not a goody, goody sort of a man, a real manly man. Shun evil company, seek the company of the best and profit thereby.—Columbia Herald.

Rev. Dr. P. H. Swift, of Chicago, is the author of these words: "It is folly to sell character for cash, self-respect for selfish enjoyment, God for the excitement of the gambling table, purity for power, truth for popular applause, the commendation of conscience for the flattery of a self-seeking crowd of ignoble men, the higher life for the lower, the spiritual for the material. The lower can not satisfy the cravings of the higher life. Life and love are more than money and merry-making. The man who trades character for gold has cheated himself more than time will ever reveal."

Bits from the Kernel.

—There is no Christianity without a divine Christ.

—Man's thoughts are not God's thoughts.

—The church is ever tempted to try to win by worldly means instead of by the path of suffering.

—The way of life is the way of the cross.

—There is no good bargain for the sale of a soul.

—No man is rich enough to buy back his lost soul.

"Is your teacher an advocate of corporal punishment, Tommy?" asked the visitor.

"No, sir," answered Tommy. "I guess she believes in moral suasion, for she just jaws us."

Purity Essential.

In no other form of food is Purity so absolutely essential as in milk products. Richness is also necessary, as without richness, milk is of little value as a food. Purity and richness are the embodiment of Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. As a food for infants or for general household purposes it has no equal.

When the Midnight Special Broke Down

By Bertha Burnham Bartlett.

The minister lifted his head from the desk where for five minutes it had rested. There was a tense expression in his usually trustful eyes, and a semblance of discouragement in the lines about his mouth. His voice, however, was very quiet as he spoke to the waiting committee.

"We've done the best we knew"—it was evident that he was trying to restore his own wavering faith in the Great Arbiter—"we've done the best we knew, and now we must accept the outcome, whatever it may be. You say that the bank officials refuse to wait longer for what we owe them and"—

"I will read their letter again," Deacon Mayberry said slowly, a sigh following his words. "This is it—a cruel though I dare say a businesslike letter: "Trustees of Highland Church: As our ultimatum regarding your pecuniary indebtedness to this corporation, we have the honor to make this proposal: If you will pay to this bank the sum of $950 on or before Monday, the 24th instant, we will cancel your whole indebtedness of $1,000. Otherwise, this will serve as notice that, upon the aforesaid date, the property will pass into the possession of the Baker Brewery Company."

"It's an infamous thing," the minister said brokenly," yet it is business, I suppose, as Deacon Mayberry says. They've given us three weeks' notice, and I suspect that they think they are generous to offer to throw off that $50, but they don't know—they can't realize how cramped the people of this village of ours are. We've done our best—$800 is what we have, isn't it, Brother Nutter?—but that won't save our church building—and Monday it will become a storehouse of the brewery!"

There was a smothered sob from the lips of the oldest man present.

"We've depleted our bank accounts, O Lord," he cried, falling upon his knees, "but there are so few of us—only twenty—and we're all so far from being blessed with this world's goods that our all is very little. But we can't bear to think of this house of thine, consecrated to thee as it has been by seasons of prayer and by the ministrations of thy servants, by the communion of thy saints, by the baptism of thy children and the last rites for our dead—we can not bear to have it desecrated by the people who are so keen to gain possession of it. And yet, O Lord, thy house is dearer to thee than it is to us. Take thou the care of it. Help us on the morrow, which seems to be ordained as the last day of our meeting here in the courts of Zion, to be trustful and to worship thee. Amen."

The minister raised his hand in benediction, not trusting himself to speak, as the deacon finished, and the little company separated to their respective homes.

It was such a pitiful little household of faith. Situated in a rocky New Hampshire village, and somewhat removed from the center of the town, it had seen its members drawn one by one away, until so few were left that services could not have been maintained had not an aged and resident preacher tendered his ministrations free of charge; yet even so, the little church was sadly in debt, and, as we have seen, was now to lose its edifice.

A solemn company it was, therefore, next morning that, much as it had ofttime gathered to weep around the body of some dear member, met supposedly for the last time in the little church.

Far different, however, was a group that met at the village tavern that morning. The "midnight special" had broken one of its driving wheels just as it was whirling into the little town, and now, perforce, the passengers aboard the train were thrust upon the hospitality of the place until the broken wheel could be repaired. Naturally, perhaps, the tavern attracted the larger number of those who sought for entertainment outside of the comfortable walls of the "midnight special."

"We've got to amuse ourselves somehow," declared one of the men who had tramped across from the siding where the big engine stood idly and sulkily puffing.

"Might go to meeting," suggested another of the group. The other men laughed.

"Meetings and 'drumming' don't seem to coincide," remarked a third member of the dapper commercial travelers.

"Yet we might do worse," another said tentatively. "We fellows so seldom have a right-down good chance to be respectable churchgoers that I move we go to meeting somewhere as Black, here, says."

"Second the motion," laughed a tall, black-eyed man, "and—I say, boys, let's get some fun out of it, too. Give the churchfolks the scare of their lives. From the looks of this place, I doubt if money is a common commodity in these parts, and I'd like to see what they'd say to a good generous contribution from us. What do you say?"

Rollicking Dick Pritchett, boot and shoe drummer, caught at the suggestion.

"Great scheme!" he declared. "The natives will be astonished to see—let me see—twelve-sixteen-twenty of us men file slowly into their meeting house—that little one down near the bridge—and will be sure to think we're either a Y. M. C. A. or a crowd of young fellows out for a lark."

"Guess they'll vote in favor of the latter and treat us accordingly," chimed in another. "I think Butler's idea is fine. Let every man Jack of us all put in what loose change he has. Every cent of it, you know, whether it's one dollar or ten. Or if he hasn't any, or has less than a dollar, tax him a fiver. How does that strike you?"

And then, as the church bell was ringing, the score of young fellows marched jovially across the fields, to the little church so nearly in the grasp of the brewery company that had decided its proximity to the railway and its distance from the town made it worth purchasing as a storehouse for their liquors.

The worshipers in the little building saw the delegation enter the church with almost a feeling of resentment. Strangers! and hardly a reverential class of strangers, either, take them as a whole, if they might judge by their appearance! They waited in uncomfortable suspense during the singing of the hymn, half-expecting some unpleasant demonstration.

Then came the prayer, and then the sermon. The traveling men who, in those days antedating the formation of the now well-known society of "Gideons," were seldom found within the house of prayer, felt their hearts grow tender as they listened to the simple eloquence of the old minister. Then the contribution-box was passed.

The pews wherein the drummers were seated were at the rear of the church, they having declined to sit farther forward, yet when the deacon reached the first seatful of the young men, there was but a pitiful showing in the bottom of the box. A moment later, however, the deacon stood transfixed with amazement, incredulity and joy, as it was returned to him filled to the brim with coppers, silver and one crisp five-dollar bill.

Deacon Mayberry roused himself to take the box at last, walked to the table where he emptied it, and then with the air of one accustomed to receiving good gifts, returned to take the offering which the second seatful of strangers might have in readiness.

Again the box was filled, and again the deacon emptied it, returning for the third seatful to make their contribution, and then again for the fourth, who, as the others had done, filled the free-will-offering box to more than overflowing.

There was solemnity in the faces of the young men, although, as they afterward confessed, in their hearts was an almost irresistible desire to laugh at the very evident astonishment of the church-folk.

And when the minister knelt in prayer which was choked with sobs, and while with one accord the congregation emulated their pastor's example, falling into the attitude of prayer, the "drummers" stole softly from the building.

"We'd best make tracks for that train," ejaculated Bob Needham as they reached the sidewalk.

Dave Taylor laughed almost hysterically. "We'd better make a driving-wheel," he said, with a woeful attempt at punning. "Oh, I say! it's moving! Sprint!"

They did sprint. And the engineer, catching a glimpse of them striking across the fields, obligingly slowed up until the last one had gained a footing upon the steps and platforms of the train.

At the church all was soon commotion. Some one tried to follow the strangers, but gave up the attempt when the "sprinting" began, and returned to help count the donation left by their erstwhile guests.

Deacon Mayberry announced the amount of the offering. It was $165.17. Then with quivering lips and trembling voices the congregation stood to sing and to receive the benediction.

The tune was Ware. Ah, how many times that little congregation had sung it, yet never before with the spirit which that day characterized the singing, broken though it was by the emotion which could not be controlled!

"All things are thine; no gift have we,
Lord of all gifts, to offer thee;
And hence with grateful hearts to-day
Thine own before thy feet we lay.

"Thy will was in the builder's thought;
Thy hand unseen amidst us wrought;
Through mortal motive, scheme and plan,
Thy wise, eternal purpose ran.

On thee for whom the heavens are small;
Thy glory is thy children's good,
Thy joy thy tender fatherhood.

Make this the abode of righteousness,
And let these doors a gateway be
To lead us from ourselves to thee."

The church-folk never learned the identity of their visitors, although the fact of their being drummers somehow reached their ears, and from that day no member of the little church—which from that time entered upon a new era of prosperity, gathering recruits for their Master's service from the byways of the town—ever failed to pray for the commercial travelers of the land. Nor is it beyond belief that this may account for the existence of the association known as the "Gideons," which counted among its early membership fourteen of "the boys" who in God's providence were the means of saving the Highland meeting house from becoming brewery property.—Congregationalist.

Finding Out What a Boy is Good For.

Professor Weaver, of the Boys' high school of Brooklyn, with his committee, have placed every graduate of his school that has applied in a position which their acquaintance with the boys in their four years' course and practical study has helped them to choose. He says the city boy does not have an equal chance with his country cousin to know about trades and occupations, or to try his hand to tools. The boy of the small town, who has the run of the whole village, knows something about most trades and occupations.

The city boy takes the first job he can get and drifts around and tries one place after another in a big establishment without advice or a chance to discover or develop his particular ability. The vocation bureau, similar to that conducted by the Boston Y. M. C. A., studies the applicant and his capabilities and works with the employment department of the Y. M. C. A. and employers to place the boy and to constantly advise with him as he is tested. The foreman of one large corporation, who has depended on the teachers' committee, said of the plan: "It is as if I were to go to a concern in which 1,200 young people have been under observation for four years and have furnished to me the assistance of the foreman of this organization in selecting intelligent, capable, industrious and punctual young people for our offices. There is no loss of time to me, and no disappointed applicants."

Last summer the sons of many city mechanics were sent to the country during the long summer vacation to work on farms and at summer homes. One of these boys tells with enthusiasm of his four weeks' engagement for which he received $14 and railroad fare. He found new friends, learned of country life and how to do things with his hands, gained ten pounds, and comes back fit and fine for his school work.

Every boy is advised to begin a saving bank account as soon as he begins to draw wages. While the boy reports frequently to his committee, the employer is asked to tell of the boy's shortcoming.

Professor Weaver has now brought his experience and plan to the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A., where he heads the Boys' Vocation Bureau. He says that the Y. M. C. A. employment department is the best fitted organization to make the work and knowledge of the teachers effective, and should work in co-operation with large effect.

The high school committee has had leaflets printed covering the requirements and opportunities in the several trades, commercial pursuits and professions. The valuable pioneer work in this line done by Professor E. W. Weaver and his colleagues at the Boys' High School, Brooklyn, is placed at the disposal of the associations, teachers and leaders of boys.

John Milton

By John Wright Buckham.

The three hundredth anniversary of the birth of John Milton impels all lovers of English literature to a fresh appraisal of the tragic life and subsequent achievement of this great poet.

John Milton was born in Bread street, London, December 9, 1608. His father, a man of strong intelligence and of musical culture, gave him a thorough education, sending him to St. Paul's school and later to Christ's College, Cambridge University. Here "the lady," as he was called, displayed not only graces of mind and person, but independence of conviction and a signal scholarship which won him recognition as the foremost scholar of the university, when he came to take his Master's degree in 1632, at the age of 24. Deterred from taking orders by his hostility to the churchmanship of Archbishop Laud, Milton retired to his father's home at Horton, where he spent the next six years in the study of Greek and Latin authors and in literary production. Already he had written noteworthy verse, both in Latin and English, including the "Ode to the Nativity" and the "Sonnet to Shakespeare." At Horton he composed the poems which embody the highest expression of the English classic style, the lyrics, L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, the Elegaic Lycidas and the Masque "Comus." Each of these is at once a perfect flower of genius and a work of the most exquisite art. This period of leisure and devotion to classicism was fittingly closed by a residence abroad of somewhat more than a year, largely spent in Italy, where he was received with marked distinction.

In the calm delight of these days of scholarly ease already was heard the distant thunder of a tempest which was to whirl the fortunes of Milton, now high in the mid-air of success, and then dash them to earth in vain and to make of the poet at once a sadder and a greater man. The outbreak of the Revolution found Milton again in England engaged now in the instruction of his two nephews and prizing an opportunity to devote part of his time at least to literature. But the summoning of the Long Parliament on the third of November, 1640, awoke the quiet-loving scholar to a sense of the great task to which patriotism was calling him. With a devotion above praise he left, as he put it, "a calm and pleasing solitar sm, fed with cheerful and confident thoughts, to embark in a troubled sea of noises and hoarse disputes." Exit the poet, the scholar, the man of culture and meditation. Enter the Puritan, the pamphleteer, the publicist. And yet the change was not so great as it seems, for the Puritan had been slumbering within the poet and the patriot within the scholar.

Milton's prose, like his poetry, could not fail to partake of the greatness of his mind and genius. Yet most of it was too controversial in manner and too confined in matter to live. But two of Milton's prose pieces have won fame—"The Areopagitica," or defense of the freedom of the press, and "The Tetrachordon," defense of divorce. The latter is the bitter fruit of a chapter in his own life, quite as painful as his blindness. In 1643 Milton went to Oxford, and after a month, in the words of his nephew, "home he returns a married man that went out a bachelor." His bride was Mary Powell, a girl of seventeen, whose father, Richard Powell, was a royalist. A few weeks of married life and the young wife had flitted back to her father's home. Autumn came and she did not fulfill her promise to return. Milton resorted to a literary man's weapon and wrote his "Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce," in which he advocated the right of divorce and re-marriage on the ground of "incompatibility of temperament." Later this was revised and published under the title, "The Tetrachordon." It was no credit to its author's reputation, buttressed though it was with scriptural arguments. Some one might cogently have answered it with a pamphlet on "Incompatibility of Choice." So hasty and ill-advised a marriage can only be explained by an unreasoning impulsiveness of the poet, which appears more than once. This fault, however, is more than atoned for by the magnanimity with which he received back his wayward wife when, two years later, she came, wellnigh homeless and penniless, and prostrated herself at his feet, like Eve before Adam in Paradise Lost.

he earnestly defended, Milton was made secretary for foreign tongues to the council. This was in 1649. In addition to his official labor of translating into Latin all foreign dispatches, he was commissioned to reply to several attacks made upon the government. Chief of these was the defense of Charles I. by Salmasias. Preparation to meet this attack cost Milton his eyesight. Well did he foresee the penalty. "The choice," he says, "lay before me of a supreme duty and loss of eyesight. * * * I could not but obey the inward monitor, I know not what, that spoke to me from heaven."

Blindness, becoming total in 1652, was but the first of a series of disasters. In May of the same year his wife died, leaving him with three daughters. Six years later the royalist reaction began in earnest, and in 1660 Milton was obliged to conceal himself to escape arrest. His writings were ordered to be burned, but he himself was spared proscription. His condition was now indeed forlorn. "His Cause Lost," as Richard Garnet pictures it, his ideals in the dust, his enemies triumphant, his friends dead on the scaffold, or exiled or imprisoned, his name infamous, his principles execrated, his property seriously impaired by the vicissitudes of the times. But is he vanquished, useless, despondent? "Paradise Lost" is the answer. It may well be, as has more than once been pointed out, that without this discipline, his blindness, his defeat, the great epic would not have been written. At all events, it came as a root out of dry ground. Dark and bitter were these years save for the glow of imagination and the uplift of spirit attending the creation of this great poem. The three impatient, ungrateful daughters—how ungracious an immortality is theirs! And yet it was not wholly their fault. With the churlish gibe that "one tongue is not enough for a woman," Milton had trained them to read aloud in five or six languages, of none of which they could understand a sentence. It was only toward the very end of his life, after the death of his second wife, who lived but a little more than a year after their marriage, that in Elizabeth Minshall, whom he married in 1663, he found one who at last ministered kindly and faithfully to his physical comfort.

"Paradise Lost" was completed in 1663 and published in 1667. It was sold to Samuel Simmons, a publisher, for £5 down and a promise of two more payments of the same sum if two editions were sold. In 1904 a New York gentleman offered £50,000 for the manuscript. A second edition was published in 1669. "Paradise Regained" was published in 1671. For good reasons, although pronounced by such critics as Wordsworth and Coleridge as the most perfect of Milton's poems, in point of execution, it has never won the same fame or favor as "Paradise Lost." "Samson Agonistes," also published in 1671, a drama after the Greek model, is the last most stately statuesque product of Milton's poetic genius. He died November 8, 1764, and was buried in the Church of St. Giles, Cupplegate.

A life of outstanding valor and greatness was this, full of intense lights and deep shadows, splendid in its achievement, tragic in its sorrows and trials. Few lives give one a deeper sense of divine strength supplementing human weakness, divine wisdom using human gifts, divine grace dispensing human events.

Outward discomfiture and defeat never reduced this soul to abjection, this life to petty and meaningless confusion.

"Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or knock the breast; no weakness, no contempt."
—"Samson Agonistes."

The personal revealings that flash through "Samson Agonistes" disclose a spirit firm in faith and courage through all failures and vicissitudes, and speaks its word of triumph and trust in the closing lines:

"All is best, though we oft doubt
What the unsearchable dispose Of Highest Wisdom brings about,
And ever best is found in the close,
Oft He seems to hide His face,
But unexpectedly returns,
And to His faithful champion hath in place
Bore witness gloriously."

The chief distinction and glory of Milton's poetry is its harmony. "The most musical of English writers," Frederick D. Maxinici calls him. As Dante is the poet of light, Milton is the poet of sound. If his eyes were closed, his ears were the more acute and sensitive. He has power to make us hear, as he heard, the melodious murmurs of Eden, the "sacred songs" and "raptures high" of heaven and the "harsh thunder that the lowest bottom shook of Erebus."

All that poetry can convey through subtle modulation and the sweep and swell of symphonic concord Milton displays. He strikes the keys of the English language as a musician sits at an organ touching every key and drowning every stop until the sounding harmony overwhelms us. Never is there a false note, a strident chord. It is all splendidly sustained and full-toned. "Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea," Wordsworth well wrote of him. We miss, perhaps, the "word-notes wild" of Shakespeare. We wonder at times if this poetry is not quite as much Greek or Latin as Italian as English. And yet we exult in the noble capacities of a language that can expand to such heights and respond to such large uses.

Milton is, above all, the poet to be read aloud. The revealing insights and suggestions in the poetry of Browning or Goethe are often best conveyed to the eye from the printed pages, but the stately music of Milton needs the interpretation of the voice. And all who have the privilege of influencing their fellows through public speech may well familiarize themselves with the melody and power of Milton's verse. It would be fatal to imitate Milton, but it is exhilarating to absorb him. For there can be but one Milton. His style in others becomes grandiloquent and unreal. With him it is supremely and unfailingly genuine. He writes as one "smit with the love of sacred song." And it will be the worse for the world if it ever ceases to listen to John Milton.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

I told you in my last about the dilapidated condition of Felix' ear, and yet not a letter has come to ask how Felix is getting along. All right. Perhaps you are too busy talking about your own ailments to long-suffering and, presumably, healthier friends, to care about the bloody ears of other people. All right. We will turn our attention to Missionary Drusie. You will remember that when we last heard from her she had stopped at a way station on her journey back to her permanent field of labor. Let's hear more from her:

"Well, I started out to say that we are waiting here (at Kio Shan) for carts and chair-bearers. The roads are dry and the weather good, and the trip by chair will not be so terrible as my cart ride last winter after ten days of snow. Besides, I am not alone now, but have the two children in my chair, with Mr. and Mrs. Nowack and the baby to accompany me. The high back of our chair has hinges, and I can let it down at night to form a cot. There are curtains all around that can be pulled up by strings so we can see out. Poles are tied to the sides of the chair so the men can carry it. Brother and Sister Nowack have come to have a great interest in the Av. S., and they think I ought highly to value such good friends; and I assure you I do. We feel it is very wonderful that God has raised up this faithful help. God bless and reward the Av. S. friends! I have had some precious letters from some of them that did me much good. Will write again when I am settled at home."

September 25 Drusie wrote from Pi Yang, having reached home once more: "We left Kio Shan Tuesday, the nurse going with the winter's provision by cart, and we foreigners by chair. At least the Chinese call them 'chairs' when they carry them, though Mrs. Nowack's was her spring cot, with cover on top and curtains at the sides. Mine was the big patented chair which the carpenter made. There were curtains and covering, and a low railing all around the sides to keep Ruth and Esther from falling out. You can imagine us three sitting in a 2x2½ foot box. Mrs. Nowack said we looked quite stately in our green-curtained carriage.

"We made up our minds not to repulse the crowds of curious people along the way if they got too close, or raised the dust and made us uncomfortable. The crowds just thronged about us, but we did not become 'irritated.' They raised the curtains, examined the 'chairs' and our clothing, and watched us eat. But I just let them look and talked to them in a friendly way. At one place a white-haired grandmother voluntarily appointed herself the guardian of our comfort, giving the people a punch in the side with her stout walking stick if they pressed too close. When she thought one crowd had looked long enough, she ordered them to leave to make room for a fresh detachment; and if any big fellow did not move fast enough, she enforced her order with sharp jabs from her stick. We could not keep from laughing, but we were grateful.

"We were on the road three days and two nights. Three times a day we stopped for a dish of rice or noodles, to supplement our home-made food. Chinese noodles are delicious, cooked with plenty of onions, leeks or garlic; or, better still, chopped up pepper. As for rice, no rice is like that cooked for twenty minutes in a clean Chinese kuo (an iron kettle shaped like a washpan). It is built into a brick oven, and the bottom of the kettle is so thin that it takes only a few little sticks, or straw, to keep the food boiling. It is marvelous how little fuel they use—as much in a week as a foreigner in one day.

"Our first night we spent in a small village. Our chairs were carried right into the one big room of the inn, where all the Chinese lodgers were. There were a number of opium smokers there, lying in groups on mats on the dirt floor, an opium lamp in the center of each group, to which their pipes were attached. If anything raises my indignation, it is to see opium smokers lying on the floor like beasts, and to think that this use was first introduced by a Christian nation at the point of the sword and cannon. The second night we stopped at a large market town.

"The inn being a little too much for our taste, we were sheltered in the postoffice, the cleanest place I've found on the road in China, except, of course, the missionary homes. The postmaster very politely entertained us and presented us with a supper" (and plenty of mail, I hope; and before I forget it, I'd think these garlic noodles must have kept the crowd back a little way, didn't they?) "and also gave up his room to us women and children. He would not accept a cent of money, so when we reached home we mailed him some books, including a nice New Testament. Imagine a weary stranger being sheltered in one of Uncle Sam's postoffices!" (If every letter box in Uncle Sam's postoffices was made big enough for a stranger to crawl into for a night's protection, he couldn't accommodate the foreigners that come over here every year. Wait until there are more of you there in China, and you'll see that postoffice closed soon after train time.) "The Chinese in our district are unusually courteous, but we can not always tell if their friendship is real, or prompted by fear. We so very often hear that 'they dare not refuse,' or 'they say nothing because they fear your country.' It is the truth that God puts the fear of the nations upon heathen lands; and so it is in China."

We promise more of this letter next time, and pledge ourselves that it becomes even more interesting than the foregoing. I also want to call you to witness how I have kept out of it, letting Drusie do all the talking.

Here is a beautifully typewritten letter from our Orphan Charlie at St. Louis:

"I think I am doing very nicely at school. My teacher thinks the same. I am glad to state in this letter that I do not need any money; I have about $1 left of the $25; when all is exhausted I will send an itemized report. You say not to hesitate about asking for money when necessary. To tell the truth, I can't help but feel that way. Of course I would not ask for money when unnecessary, for I know under what circumstances it came to get into my possession. Mrs. Brown, the matron, would not have me call for money were it not necessary.

"By the time you read this we will be in our new orphan home at 2949 Euclid avenue. It is a nice large place, with several acres, out in the suburbs of the city. The children will have plenty of room to play in, besides an excellent new building. Moving an orphans' home is quite a large proposition. There were several large moving vans here this morning, and more are coming Tuesday. Mrs. Brown has gone over to the new place most every day, and she has worked so hard straightening up that she is almost sick. The children are also doing what they can to help. Every one is in a buzz and very excited. It is beautiful weather, and I trust you are having it just as beautiful down in Arkansas. I know Felix is having a nice time lying out in his hammock these fine balmy summer mornings. Give him a nice gentle stroke in his favorite place for me" (which will not be his ear, I dare say) "for I fear he has about forgotten me." (Since it is absolutely necessary for Charlie to spend money every day on car fare, going to and fro in educational pursuits, and buying a downtown snack to keep his stomach on a par with his shorthand, I am sending him to-day, from the Av. S. contribution, $10.90, for I know very well that the $1 he now has can't last very long. In the meantime, he can send me an account of the $25 expenditure, which I will publish on this page.)

While we are still dealing with foreigners, perhaps the following from George Gordon will be interesting. If it isn't, it will be because I have been obliged to convert his peculiar expressions into English. He sends $2 for Drusie Malott, and describes the interior of a home of the well-to-do in Zacatecas, Mexico: "The entrance to such a dwelling is guarded by a do (he means a door) that looks for all the world like an old barn do', rough and uncouth, on which I bruise my nucks (his knuckles) many is the time. This do' is a double affair, like all Mexican front do's, wide enow to admit a carriage or omnibus. She is painted green on the outside, and bolted and barred within. The first thing that greets your eyes on entering this outer portal is a patio that appears as a jungle of verduah (verdure). This, of itself, convinces you that however ambitious the builder to run his vehicules (vehicles) right into the heart of his fambly (family), so to speak, and thus sustain the reputash (reputation) of a Mexican household, such idees have been abandoned, forsooth because no vehicle could run over all that greenhouse in the patio. To the right as you enter—suppose yourself now riding around New Orleans with a husky orator on the footbode (board) of the auto, pointing out the various sites of interest—to your right is a bedroom occupied by the son of the family. The left is a blank wall, norming the end of the parlor. Well, having advanced into the patio we tun (turn) sharply to the left, and a few steps drag us to the entrong (entrance), which is entered by proceeding on the bias as my Aunt Anna used to say; that is, a sou'westerly course, which, if carried to its ultimate conclusion, would precipitate you back into the street from which you have just emerged. But we don't want to go back yet, for I am sho (sure) you will want to look about you. In the parlor we find a table on which rests the images of Mary, Joseph and Christ as an infant of about four years, before which continually burneth the taper in a glass of olive oil. There is also a fine place for a stove, if they had one, a rattan settee, chairs scattered broadcast throughout the land, a center table, over which is suspended a hanging lamp, a piannerfort (piano) with a stool, where sits the beautiful daughter of the family; the chair in juxtaposition where I sit to turn the music, and in any way to dispoage (dispose) of my time and talents to the best advantage; a portable music rack, such as are used for violins, a window (we call them ventanas) wopening (opening) upon the street," etc.

Birdie Lee Cleeton, of Keytesville, Mo., sends in her third quarterly report, tastefully made into a booklet fastened with ribbons of two colors. I see that all her quotations are from the Bible. The care with which she has given an account of each week shows a laudable pride in the Av. S.

Mrs. Clara Adair, Raritan, Ill.: "I enclose two dimes for Drusie's shower; am sorry to be one of the last drops. Little Clara Meacham, 5 years old, sends one of these dimes. May God bless dear Drusie is my prayer."

Mrs. S. A. Penn, Elk City, Okla.: "We are sending a few drops to help swell the dime-shower to an enormous cloudburst. We hope Drusie may always have the necessities and comforts of life, that she may be better able to help the needy, spiritually and temporarily, in her chosen work. The Lord's richest blessings be on all the Av. S. readers." (Sixty cents.)

140 CHURCH BUILDINGS ERECTED WITH OUR ANNUITY FUND

THE ANNUITY PLAN

WHAT IT IS! HOW IT WORKS!

In Our Church Extension Fund, at Kansas City, Mo.

What It Is—Through our Annuity Plan you can administer upon your own estate by putting your money into our Church Extension Fund. This is far better than making a bequest, because the Board will pay you 6 per cent, in semi-annual payments, if you are fifty years old, or more, and the interest will be paid to your wife if she survives you. Between the ages of forty and forty-nine the rate is 5 per cent, and 4 per cent, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-nine.

ITS GREAT ADVANTAGES TO YOU:

1. You can see your money work while you live.
2. You have no trouble or losses in making reinvestments.
3. You have no taxes nor attorneys' fees to pay and your income is regular.
4. The Society is perpetual and is incorporated. Its funds are perpetual and are loaned only on first mortgages where titles are absolutely good.
5. Your money is safe because the Annuity Bond which the Board issues you is as good as a Government Bond because it is backed up by all of the assets of the Fund, which now amount to $650,000 and which will constantly increase.
6. We receive remittances of $100, or as many hundreds or thousands as you can send, and your money will be received at any time and the Bond will be dated so that your interest begins at once.

How Your Money Works—The Board does not invest your money in some secular enterprise and WAIT FOR YOU TO DIE before using it in the work of Church Extension. All of our Annuity money is loaned at 6 per cent to aid promising congregations to build. The money is returned by the churches using it in five equal, annual installments, and as fast as it returns it goes out again and again to build churches. Your money is thus in a PERPETUAL WHIRL OF DOING GOOD, because we have more demands for Annuity money than we can answer. Our mission churches in the new Southwest are glad to get Annuity money from the Board of Church Extension and pay 6 per cent, which is only 2 per cent more than is charged for the regular funds. They then have their loans in the hands of their friends.

Our Annuity Fund has received 237 gifts and $266,000, and 140 church buildings have been erected by Annuity Funds alone.

We can use $100,000 this year. Send remittances at once and give your full legal name and your age Remit to in the shower for Drusie; here is one drop." (This was written August 11, before Oklahoma got into the campaign.)

Mrs. G. W. Warren, Shawnee, Okla.: "I have been intending for some time to send something for Drusie's shower. We have four little granddaughters and a very sweet little motherless girl we have cared for for a long time. Will send a dime for each one to make a heavy shower for Drusie. With prayers and love for Drusie in her work."

Mrs. E. Higgins, Dietrich, Ill.: "I always enjoy reading the Av. S. reports. I send some drops to swell the shower for Drusie, with best wishes for her good work. Two dimes for Mr. and Mrs. B. Higgins and one for Miss Ollie Adams."

Margaret Skinner, Auburn, Ky.: "When I reached Chicago I was surprised to find that my sister-in-law and her little boy read the 'Advance Society.' Hiram Smith sends 10 cents for Drusie. His mother, Mrs. Katcher sends her mite with mine. I left Mero after writing to Orphan Charlie to come, so did not get to see him there. I will soon be in Auburn, as that is my home now. Enclosed find 50 cents. Why no more of your interesting and instructive stories in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST?"

Bonnie Jones, Holly, Colo.: "My younger sister and I wish to send our Missionary Drusie a drop to help in the shower. I have enjoyed the Av. S. letters very much for a year. May God bless the good work."

Mrs. F. M. Kirkham, the Kirkham Ranch, Glendora, Cal.: "After a long dry spell we have been having some fine rains here, which remind me of the shower you have been having for Drusie. So here go some drippings to fall on her, for she is worthy of all she can get. Her good letters read like she is doing a grand work; they are as interesting as romance. Don't let the showers abate—there will be more to follow from these parts. That Advance department is useful and full of interest. We enjoyed reading about that visit to your old Missouri home, but had pity for poor Felix, left alone. Next vacation you take, do come to the Kirkham Ranch, bring Felix with you, and have a good old-fashioned Southern visit. Stripe, our cat, will purr her delight and share with Felix her menu of gopher sandwich, with milk, fried cottontail, brown gravy, codfish with cream, boiled gopher with nuts, mountain trout with egg sauce, rats a la Newburg, cottage cream cheese, mice a la Bordelais, lizard bouillon in season, ice cream with cake. This is a cordial standing invitation." (I am sure Felix would be in ecstasies over such a table d'hote, but I grieve to find very little on the board suited to my own appetite. It seems to me he would fare much the better of us two. Methinks I had best keep him here in the Ozarks, while I cook my plain but serviceable cornbread and spread upon it my Arkansas butter. And as it is about time for me to be about it, I will bring these few lines to a close.

HOW DID THEY KNOW?

"Mamma! Look at those dolls in the window."

"Yes, dear. You never saw such large ones, did you?"

"No-o-o. They look like little girls, don't they, mamma? Why aren't there big ones home?"

"I guess they cost too much, dear. People at home wouldn't buy them, but New York people are very rich."

"Am I rich, mamma?"

"No, dear."

"Why?" But the "why" was not a question. It remained unanswered, and for a while the child was still.

"Mamma," came impressively at length.

"What is it, dear?"

"Maybe those aren't dolls."

"What do you mean?"

"Maybe they're little girls like me."

"Oh, no; they don't move, you see. A little girl couldn't keep still like that."

"Don't they ever move?"

"No."

"Don't they wink, ever, when you're not lookin'?"

"No, dear, they can't move at all."

The two had entered the store now and the mother was busily finding her way to the rear counter.

"Now you must stay right here, while I look at the things, dear, because I don't want you to get lost."

The child sat quietly on the high stool for some time, unusually quiet for her, with her blue eyes looking vacantly ahead. Suddenly she winked, and there before her was a big window. It was not the same one she had seen before, for there was no big doll. Some bright ribbons were lying around and some were hanging from a place very high. Lots of people were going by. Would they know if she kept quite still? She felt sure she could. A tag lay on the floor. She slipped down and stuck it on her dress. Into the center of the large, half-arranged window she marched and stood, her arms pinned to her side, her eyes glassily set ahead. Why were so many people stopping, and what were they laughing at? "Ain't she a peach!" came up from the crowd. She wanted to look at them, but she must keep perfectly still or they would know. "Say, little girl, you dropped something." Did they know? The hot blood rushed into her cheeks and she wished she had never come. She couldn't turn and walk out now that they were still watching. "What is that child up to?" some one behind her was saying. Then quick arms were about her and she looked up into mamma's face. "I didn't move, mamma," she sobbed, "but they—they knew all the same."—Selected.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, DECEMBER 17, 1908.

THOU ETERNAL ONE, I need Thee for time. They are always telling me that earth is the robing room in which to prepare for heaven. Rather hast Thou said that heaven is the robing room in which to prepare for earth. It is from within Thy sanctuary that I am armed for the battle of life; it is in meeting my God that I learn to meet my brother. I am not fit for this world till I have seen the other world; I must go up to the mount ere I give laws to the people. It is from behind the veil of eternity that I speak to the things of time. I could not bear the fretting of the shore were it not for the sight of the sea. I could not stand the murmur of the crowd were it not for the murmur of the shell. I should sink beneath the burden of the heat of the day unless I were refreshed by the spray from the ocean of Thy love. Roll in, then, thou great sea! Roll in upon the hot sands of time, and lave the thirsty land! Roll in upon the beach, and wash its impurities away! Let us hear the sound of Thy waves, and we shall bear the rumbling of earth's chariot wheels! He who has lain one moment on Thy breast is fit to tread the dusty courts of time.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events

It appears that the Jews are trying to prevail upon King Edward, of England, to exercise his influence upon the Sultan of Turkey for permission to rebuild the Jewish temple on Mount Moriah at Jerusalem. It is argued that such an enterprise would have a tendency to concentrate the scattered members of the race in the land of their fathers. There are many Jews who have the strong belief that their nation is to be resuscitated, and that once more the Holy City will shine in its ancient glory. But there are difficulties in the way, though from a monetary standpoint the temple could be easily, no doubt, erected. The Moslems have the mosque of Omar on Mount Moriah, which is considered next in importance to Mecca, and it is not likely Moslem power would relinquish this point of advantage for the re-establishment of the temple, though it might be an honor to God and the admiration of the world.

Rebuilding the Temple.

There has been another tragedy. One is almost made by it to accept Fuller's saying about it not being well to trust him who seems a saint. We are not going to apply the epithet of hypocrite to Alexander Dowie, but we rather imagine some of his followers will not stop from even saying that he stole the livery of the court of heaven to serve the devil in. One hardly knows just where to classify a man whose career was such as Dowie's. We are just in receipt of an article in the Home Herald, wherein the writer, speaking of the four or five warring factions in Zion City, says:

A Burst Bubble.

"The receiver published his statement to the investors on the day of my arrival in the Zion City News, showing their stocks to be worth from twenty to twenty-eight cents on the dollar. He had anticipated that its publication would create something of a sensation, but it was received by the people in sullen silence. For the first time they were informed fully to what they had sacrificed the wealth which they had contributed to the Lord through Dr. Dowie. Five hundred and fifty thousand dollars of it had gone in overdrafts on his personal account. Over a million more was represented by overdrafts of the various institutions of Zion, all of which were John Alexander Dowie working under different names. For the first time the city knew how Mrs. Dowie had squandered money right and left in the furnishings of Shiloh House."

The way of a fool is right in his own eyes. But we are sorry for the fool, oftentimes. Yet the day is not here, we fear, when isms will not have followers, or mental vagueness be productive of little but spiritual apathy, however much the shouting.

Not so many years ago it was the boast of this country that it spent most of its money in education and very little for war. But a change has come, and now in a time of peace we are spending five hundred million dollars a year for war munitions and equipment, while the cost of the entire public school system is only two hundred millions. It is really worth the time of Congress to examine closely and consider carefully any appropriations looking toward further military and naval expenditures. We understand, of course, the argument that we have to be prepared for war in the midst of peace, but when it is claimed that half of the ships of the British and German navies are practically obsolete, the United States may well go slow on enormous expenditures for which we get so little return. We recall the words of General Grant, who said at one time "no war was ever fought which could not be avoided." With the growth of the peace sentiment, let us not be overhasty in overarming ourselves. We have become a world power, but we have, let us remember, won that position not by our might in battle.

Millions for War.

That some uniformity in our law on the subject is desirable, is made very apparent by the statistics recently published by the bureau of the census, supplementing those of an earlier period, on the nation's history of marriage and divorce for the past forty years. Between 1887 and 1906 there were 12,832,044 marriages, and 945,625 divorces. This means that about one marriage in twelve has an end in divorce. At the present rate of separations 66,000 people annually are freed from marriage ties. Divorce is at present two and one-half times as common compared with the married population as it was forty years ago. It has been supposed that the Dakotas were the least particular about the binding necessity of the marriage relation, but Illinois, it appears, is far in the lead in the matter of divorces granted, while Ohio and Texas came second and third. In the first decade (from 1870 to 1880) of this forty year period divorces increased only about two-thirds as fast as the population, but at the end of this period they were increasing three times as fast as the population. The average duration of marriages terminated by divorce is about ten years. Sixty per cent, or three-fifths last less than ten years, and forty per cent last longer. Love's young dream did not survive the first year in the marriage state, as shown by statistics during the entire period from 1887 to 1906, in 18,876 cases, but the number of divorces increased to about 27,764 in the second year of married life, and reached its maximum in the fifth year, when the divorces numbered 68,770. This seems to be the most critical year in the matter of connubial happiness, for from that point on the number diminishes year by year, but not until the eighteenth year is reached does the number again fall below the number granted in the first year of married life. Our free and easy methods of courtship are attended by the free and easy method of separation. When we compare these statistics with those of Europe, it makes one wonder if the carefulness in the matter of getting married in the Old Country has not its lesson for American parents.

The Tale of Divorce.

Had it not been for the peculiar name assumed by one of them, the "riot" caused by some religious fanatics in Kansas City last week would not perhaps, have attracted much attention outside of that community. The fanatics are said to belong to the "Holy Rollers," who are anything but holy. They were exhorting and begging on the streets, and attacked a policeman who questioned them. This led to a pitched battle with pistols, resulting in a number of deaths. What we are more concerned about is a statement that this marks the end of street preaching in certain cities. To make an extreme case like this a rule to put a stop to open air evangelism would be unjust to hundreds of sincere, law-abiding people who are the saviours of the turbulent classes not easily reached in other ways. A tribute of special praise must be given to one policeman involved in the trouble. Michael Mulane died because he refused to shoot a woman who was the first cause of the trouble, though he could have killed her before she shot him.

"Adam God."

While it is no part of a missionary's aim to win earthly rewards, we are glad that the order of merit has been conferred upon J. H. De Forest, of the American Missionary Board, by the emperor of Japan. Dr. De Forest is one of the most prominent and influential missionaries in the Orient.

The Pentateuch of Our Movement.

It occurred to us recently in thinking over the different stages of our religious movement that all unconsciously we had reproduced in our history the five steps in the development of the Hebrew people, designated by the names of the first five volumes of the Old Testament known as the Pentateuch. Of course, the words have a somewhat different content in our history from what they had in the life of the Hebrews, but the germinal idea is very similar, and the parallelism is, to say the least, striking, as the following brief synopsis will show. Of course, like the Hebrews, we had our GENESIS.

This, of course, was the beginning point in our history as well as that of the Hebrews. It was the period of the Declaration and Address of Thomas Campbell, and of the Christian Association. The idea, in that period, was not to found a new and independent religious body, but to so present the claims and conditions of Christian union that they would permeate all existing religious bodies. It was thought that these truths were so self-evident that once they were clearly stated within the various denominations they would win for themselves the necessary hospitality, and would drive out all contrary views. The sequel proved far otherwise. The new truths found little or no congenial soil in the existing religious bodies. It was a case of attempting to put new wine into old bottles. Therefore, there was an

EXODUS.

Those who had the openness of mind to accept the plea for unity, and who recognized the imperative need for religious reform on the lines indicated in the Declaration and Address found it necessary to sever their relation with existing churches in order that they might have liberty to teach and exemplify the truths and ideals of the new movement. Not according to their original desire and purpose, but as a necessity forced upon them, these reformers found themselves an independent body of believers, working together for common ends and aims. The object of their exodus from existing bodies was that they might escape sectarian bondage, and reach the goodly land of unity and liberty. Strange enough, however, just as the Israelites in the wilderness showed a disposition to return to the flesh-pots of Egypt and resume their galling yoke of bondage, so it came about in our contests with our opponents that a legalistic spirit was developed in many among us, and we had our

LEVITICUS.

There were some among us who called for a "Thus saith the Lord" not alone in matters of faith, but as authority for having a Sunday-school, using an organ in the worship, or organizing a missionary society, through which the churches might co-operate in spreading the Gospel. Failing to find the specific authorization of these agencies, they not only refused to employ them, but would have no fellowship with those who did. This view of Christianity made the New Testament a sort of modern Leviticus, which was supposed to contain a specific revelation of the minutiae of Christian life. Many recovered from the error, but many others adhered to this view of things, except, perhaps, as relates to Sunday-schools, and now consider themselves as separated from the rest of their brethren by this difference. But closely following this period, and growing out of our marvelous success in pointing out the conditions of salvation to inquiring sinners, there was developed among us a great passion for NUMBERS.

This was the period of great meetings, in which, in many instances, no doubt, too much stress was laid on numbers, and not enough on the necessity for thoroughness of conversion. Not all pastors and evangelists could be charged with this error, but the habit was sufficiently prevalent to mark a distinct phase in our movement. Its justification, too, was sufficiently plausible to vindicate any one from the charge of consciously, or intentionally, perverting the gospel order. We ought to be zealous in bringing men to Christ, and the more we can bring to him the better; only let us be sure that they are brought to Christ, and not simply to church membership. If we are not mistaken, the conviction that attention should be given to quality rather than quantity is now gaining ground both among our pastors and evangelists, and there is a growing sense of responsibility in the matter of dealing with human souls, so that their conversion is not to be regarded as external merely, but internal and spiritual. There is, also, a reaction setting in against a certain narrowing influence which has been at work among us, and which was putting unwarrantable limitations upon our Christian fellowship. Hence we seem to be coming to our

DEUTERONOMY.

This period in Israelitish history stands for the recalling of the people back to the simplicity and purity of the Mosaic Law. The people had forgotten and had ceased to practice certain teachings of Moses, until Hilkiah, the priest, found the Book of the Law in the Temple and brought it to the attention of the king and the people. It is perfectly clear that many among us had departed from that broad spirit of Christian fellowship, and of Christian liberty, which characterized our movement in its beginning, and which are so splendidly emphasized in Thomas Campbell's Declaration and Address. It is a fortunate circumstance, therefore, that in this Centennial year, when we are reviewing our history, there has been discovered that immortal document, which has been brought out in a new edition, to the end that we may renew our faith in those principles which alone, under God, can give success to our plea for Christian unity. In this Deuteronomic period of our history let us catch the spirit that breathes in the Declaration and Address, which we believe is the spirit of the New Testament. If we do this we shall close up our divided columns, cross the Jordan of our differences, and, under Christ's leadership, enter at last the Promised Land that flows with liberty, love and unity.

An Act of Faith Vindicated.

In two brief editorials in our last issue, written in the midst of the proceedings of the Federal Council at Philadelphia, we gave a very brief synopsis of the proceedings up to that point. The program of the Council moved forward with the reports and addresses and resolutions to a successful conclusion at noon Tuesday, the 8th. Some of the great questions discussed were, "Home Missions," the report of which was presented by Rev. Edward P. Hill, of McCormick Theological Seminary. We quote a few sentences:

"We are beginning to realize that the things we hold in common are infinitely more significant than those which distinguish us. We are being concerned with the impressive fact that unless there is a coming together of the evangelical forces in this land of ours, we seem to be engaged in a losing fight. * * *The thought of seventeen million followers of Christ, together under a single banner, is a thing to inspire the most sluggish imagination! Seventeen millions after so long a separation at last together, to plan and pray and work in the name of their common Lord and Savior, for the extension of God's kingdom! Seventeen million soldiers, after years of bushwhacking, at last wheeling into line for the greatest battle the world has known! This is thrilling, magnificent, awe-inspiring!"

And so, indeed, it is. But as the report goes on to say, "it is one thing for the men in the watch-tower to catch sight of a glow in the east; it is another for the multitudes to see it." To make the multitudes of Christian men and women in America see the vision which came to that representative body is, indeed, a matter of the first consideration.

The report on "Sunday Observance" was presented by our own Frederick D. Power, of Washington. Throughout the report the Lord's day was emphasized as the pearl of days—a holy day, to be "kept sacred to the duties and joys of family life after the hours of public worship." "The Family Life" was the theme of an able paper by Bishop Doane. "Religion in Higher Institutions" was presented by Rev. D. S. Stephens, D. D. "International Relations," presented by Prof. Wade Rogers, LL. D., was a strong appeal for international peace. "Religious Instruction Through the Sunday School" was presented by Mr. W. S. Hartshorn, who emphasized teacher training as one of the great needs of the present time.

One of the ablest papers presented to the Council was on "The Church and Modern Industry," by the Rev. Frank Mason North,

D. D. This report was presented to a great mass meeting of the laboring men on the following Lord's day, and was received with great enthusiasm. The report on Temperance, by Bishop Wilson, of the Methodist Church, awakened a large amount of enthusiasm as it pointed out total abstinence as the only safe rule for the individual, and prohibition as the wise policy for the state.

In all these reports there was an emphasis on the necessity of co-operation on the part of the churches, to carry forward these great reforms. Indeed, it is the greatness of these mighty tasks before the Church today that is awakening Christians to the need of unity in order to accomplish its mission. It was a great privilege to sit in an assembly of some of the ablest and most representative men in the United States and listen to the discussion of these great problems that have to do with the life of the Church, and of our civilization. As we listened to these strong pleas for Christian unity, in order that Christ's will may be done on earth as it is in heaven, we thought of that heroic band of pioneers in this holy cause, who, a century ago, lifted up the banner of reform in the wilderness of our denominationalism and wrote upon it the great word "Union"—union in Christ in order to the conversion of the world. It was a sublime act of faith. They were derided and persecuted for condemning the divisions among the people of God, and pleading for a united Church. Less than a century has gone, and behold the leading Protestant bodies of the nation gathered under the common title of "Churches of Christ in America," seeking to bring about the unity for which He prayed! Was an act of faith ever more gloriously vindicated than was the inauguration of this plea for Christian union at the beginning of the last century, in the midst of the denominational strife and party spirit which then prevailed?

How these pioneers would have rejoiced to see a day like this, or to have attended a meeting like that at Philadelphia! Brother Power said in his speech at our banquet at Philadelphia, "Alexander Campbell would have ridden on horseback a thousand miles to have been present at such a meeting as this Council." And what an address he would have made, after he arrived, on the evils of a divided Christendom and the need and basis of union! Is it not significant that the name adopted under which all evangelical churches could rally was "Churches of Christ"—"The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America"?

Thanks be to Almighty God for the progress which has been made in the century past, and may it be—as it surely will be if this progress continues—that long before the end of the present century Christ's prayer for unity will be completely fulfilled. What a privilege it is to be a part of a religious movement whose chief aim and impulse has been, and is, the unity of a divided Church! May we walk worthy of so high and holy a calling, and fulfill, in some reasonable measure, the expectations of our Lord, who has honored us with so great a mission!

Notes and Comments

Once more let us hear the voice of the Master, stilling the noise of controversy, as it once stilled the waves of Galilee, saying, "Peace, be still!" He is still on board the good ship of Zion, and neither slumbers nor sleeps, as in the days when he was here in the flesh. The vessel will neither founder nor miss its desired haven while our great Pilot is at the helm.

Nothing could be more beautiful and impressive than the spirit of brotherly love which prevailed in the great council at Philadelphia between brethren holding different views on many subjects. Their unity was in Christ. Why can not we, who owe allegiance to a common cause, as well as to a common Lord, love each other in spite of our little differences? If all of us are to be deprived of the love and confidence of those who differ from us in opinion, how poor, indeed, we shall be!

During the sitting of the Council in Philadelphia there were two meetings, on the side, which were very delightful. One of these, the banquet given to the Disciples by their brethren in Philadelphia, we have already mentioned. The other was a meeting of the Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples, between sessions of the Council, at the Roger Williams Bldg., the Baptist Publishing House. Dr. Wayland Hoyt, "the grand old man" of the Baptists in Philadelphia, presided, and he called on a number of us for speeches, and these speeches all struck the keynote of unity and brotherly love. "Why should we stay apart, except for the sake of the brethren who do not understand us as we understand each other?" was the conundrum which no one could answer. The thing to do is to disseminate the same feeling of fraternity among the brethren in all these churches—in the South and West—until we shall learn to love each other and to work together as brethren. At Dr. Hoyt's suggestion at the close we all stood and, joining hands, sang "Blest be the tie that binds." It was a tender and impressive meeting; and it was very kind and thoughtful in these Baptist brethren of Philadelphia to suggest it, but it was just like them to do a brotherly thing of that kind.

Dr. Bancroft Devins says in a communication which he has sent us: "Nineteen million members of Protestant churches were represented through their delegates at the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, held in Philadelphia, December 2-8. Thirty-four of the principal religious denominations of the country having officially approved the plan of federation which was proposed at the Inter-Church Conference in New York three years ago, the plan became operative and the organization perfected, which interests directly between forty and fifty million people, or more than half of the population of the United States. While less than a fifth of the religious bodies of America have adopted the plan of federation, those which have done so represent nine-tenths of the membership in the Protestant churches."

Nothing could be more bountiful than the hospitality extended to the Council by the citizens of Philadelphia. The Presbyterian Board of Publication tendered the free use of the Witherspoon building, with its great assembly hall, and free lunch tickets were furnished to the delegates who, stopping in the suburbs, were compelled to take their lunches down town. Free writing rooms, with a free stenographer, were placed at the disposal of the delegates. The great collation served in the Academy of Music on Monday evening to the vast multitudes who filled the great building, must have been a costly affair. Bishop McKay Smith presided on that occasion, and addresses were delivered by Dr. Aked, of New York City, and Dr. Dunning, of Boston. These addresses were outspoken in their sentiments in favor of union, and drew forth the enthusiastic applause of the great audience.

This is from The Central Baptist. "Just now it is being vehemently discussed, pro and con, among the Disciples, as to whether or not one of their number, a professor in a university, whose orthodoxy is in question, shall or shall not resign from the program of the Centennial Convention to be held in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, next year, when the denomination launched by Alexander Campbell will celebrate its one hundred years of history. One of the leading papers of the Disciples devotes seven pages to this controversy and then follows this with one page devoted to "Christian Union." Seven pages of fuss and one page of union! Is it not a little singular that the leaders of this denomination talk so much about union with other denominations and exhibit so little of union among themselves? While our Disciple, or Christian, brethren do so much quarreling among themselves and so much lecturing of other denominations on the subject of union, they are in danger of being suspected of lacking in sense or sincerity and possibly both."

There is not as much sign of grief and tears, in the foregoing reference to our divisions, as we should like to see in a paper representing a religious body of so close kin. May we not remind our esteemed contemporary that little family quarrels, which arise occasionally in the best regulated families, do not always mean the disruption of the family? We can at least sing, as the denominations do when they get together:

> "We are not divided,
> All one body we;
> One in faith and doctrine,
> One in charity,"

and then we will try to make the song true in our experiences. When a man and his wife "fall out" and "make up" they sometimes love each other better than ever! Who knows but that this little exchange of peppery courtesies may be only the prelude to a great love-feast at Pittsburg?

Editor's Easy Chair.

In a letter from one of our able and widely known ministers, commending a recent editorial in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, the brother rather apologizes for taking our time in expressing his approbation, and adds: "But sometimes it helps to say so." You are right, brother. It not only "sometimes," but nearly always "helps to say so." As a rule, people are far more apt to express their displeasure when something appears in their paper that they do not like than they are to express their approval of what has given them genuine pleasure. Editors are men of like passions and frailties with other men. Their hearts are often burdened with cares and anxieties in connection with the Cause, of which their readers know but little. They are the subject, frequently, of harsh criticism. They do the best they know how, we believe, but, no doubt, often err. A word of approbation and of brotherly suggestion is always welcome. Yes, "it helps to say so." If you feel grateful to husband, or wife, for some special deed of kindness, some unselfish act, "it helps to say so." If a friend or brother is passing through the shadows of some great sorrow, and you sympathize with him, "it helps to say so." If some tried and tempted brother is giving way to temptation and slipping downward to the abyss, and you feel that a kind, warning word may arouse his better nature and make him stronger to resist evil, "it helps to say so." If father and mother are becoming aged, and show that the burdens of life are bearing heavily upon them, and you feel in your heart any debt of gratitude toward them, it will "help to say so." Even the modest violet, placed on the desk, or in the hand of the living, is better than a cart-load of American Beauties piled on the coffin of the dead.

One of the greatest wrongs we can do to another with whom we have to do, is to attribute to him unworthy motives. We can not, of course, annul the law that "By their fruits ye shall know them;" but we may judge our brother charitably, and accord to him honesty of purpose and purity of motive, until facts make this impossible. Just now it seems to us there is great need of charity in judging each other's motives If, in this controversy that has arisen over the Centennial program, for instance, all parties would agree to accord to each other sincere and honest motives, it would relieve all the tension and friction which have been developed. If we have all simply blundered in our blindness while seeking to do the right thing, why shouldn't we pardon each other, as we expect pardon from God, and go on loving each other, and seeking to do the Master's work? None but the eye of God can penetrate into the innermost depths of the human heart, to know the secret motives and purposes which prompt men's actions. Let us not, then, judge one another, for with what judgment we judge we shall be judged; and with what measure we mete it shall be measured unto us. We ought to judge ourselves severely, and others charitably. It is a good time for all of us to look closely into all our own hearts, and test, as far as we can, our own motives; but as for our brother, let us assume that however much he may differ from us, he is acting conscientiously. This is why the men who wore the blue and those who wore the gray can love and respect each other. They now understand that both acted in harmony with their honest convictions of duty. We can love brethren who differ from us, as long as we believe in their honesty of motive. Let us cease to judge one another.

An esteemed brother, writing for one of our papers, suggests "the way out" of the present controversy about the Centennial program. It is to the effect that all the secretaries connected with our general organizations, who are on the Centennial committee, should resign their places on that committee, and let the chairman of the national convention appoint a new committee, which would prepare a new program. This brother, we doubt not, is honestly seeking an amicable adjustment of differences on the subject, but it does not seem to us to be "the way out" of the difficulty. What has been done has been done. It would not change the action of these secretaries one whit for them to resign. If they are to be blamed now, they would rightly be blamed afterwards, unless their resignation could be interpreted as repentance. Besides, a change in program would only shift the battle. Beloved, there is "a more excellent way." It is the way indicated above, namely, that we all cease to judge one another and become "kindly affectioned one to another." The attempt to find some course of action which would meet the approval of all would be certain to fail. What is needed, therefore, is something far better and deeper than unity of opinion concerning the matter in question, namely, unity of spirit and purpose, and the love which hides a multitude of sins. That is "the way out." And there is no other way. Without this, the resignation of Prof. Willett from the program and of the secretaries from the committee would avail nothing. But with the spirit of unity and of mutual love and forbearance, all obstacles in the way of our harmonious co-operation in making our Centennial a great success appear as trivial and unimportant.

What about our second Centennial? Would it not be a good idea to try to look back from that height now, on the preparations we are making for the present Centennial? How different will be the problems which will then confront us! How insignificant will appear the little differences about which we are disputing now! Time obliterates our fine distinctions, destroys our prejudices, softens our judgments, and buries in the grave of oblivion our petty differences and ambitions. We shall hope that the men of that future time will judge very charitably those of us who are actors now in this Centennial drama, which we are preparing to present to the world. Let us hope that our newspaper files will not carry forward to those better and brighter days some of the things which now fill their columns. A little exercise of faith in the truth to which all history testifies, that "the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns," will enable us to see how soon some of the things to which we now attach so much importance will become trivialities in our own thought, and in the thought of the world. How often has it happened, and must happen, that the heterodoxy of to-day is the orthodoxy of to-morrow, and vice versa! But we may be sure that Christ, who is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever," will abide long after "our little systems" have had their day and "ceased to be." His gospel, too, will abide to feed the hunger of men's hearts as it does to-day. Ought we not to see to it, then, that we do nothing to dishonor the great Head of the Church, nor to mar the progress of that gospel, which is at once the power of God and the hope of the world?

Since the foregoing paragraphs were written we have read an article in The Christian Standard by Charles S. Medbury, of Des Moines, entitled "A More Excellent Way," which harmonizes well with what we have written above. He, too, thinks that "the way out," indicated by our Brother Hill, as indicated above, is not the way. Let us quote his own words as to the way he thinks will bring us permanent peace and progress:

"Our whole brotherhood must go to its knees! It must be clearly seen by us all—editors, missionary secretaries, preachers, teachers, and the great rank and file—that nothing is gained for the kingdom of God by momentary personal advantage of any sort whatever! Protests in one paper and counter protests in others! May our God open our eyes, not alone to our peril as a people, but to the peril of a sacred cause! The forces of unity divided! Could anything be more pitiful!

But is there no way out? Must missionary contributions be lessened and evangelism be crippled in the year God marked out for us as the year of our pre-eminent joy?

Oh, my brethren, there is a way out, but it is the way of the cross! Pride must be set aside and personal advantage counted as refuse. We must remember that, after all, "we be brethren." The love that seems lost must reassert itself. Longings to save must take the place of ambitions to conquer. Each must seek to outdo the other in generous concession. There must be genuine rivalry in the realm of goodwill."

That is the sort of spirit that will insure unity, peace and victory. That is "the way out" of our vexed complications into the larger life of liberty and loyalty and service, in Christ our Lord. The wisdom of the convention in selecting Brother Medbury as president of its Centennial convention is vindicated in this irenic and Christian solution of the problem which confronts us. The Easy Chair expresses the hope that all the brethren will follow the path herein indicated, so that we may resume a united and aggressive campaign in behalf of the kingdom of God.

The Union That Ought To Be

By George H. Combs

[This is the address that was to have been delivered at the Baptist-Disciple union session at the New Orleans Convention. We prevailed upon Brother Combs to permit us to publish it. As our readers know, it was not delivered by reason of a misunderstanding which at first cancelled this part of the program.]

None can regret more than I the absence of Dr. Garrison from our midst, and the consequent loss we all sustain. And yet I make no apology for responding to this emergency call; for though I wish that some father in Israel might have been called to this task, and though time limitations, to speak of no others, have made impossible the preparation of an address of such maturity as befits the dignity and importance of this occasion, yet at least I may speak with that preparedness which comes from a lifetime's concern in this great matter.

From my childhood I have been ravished by the dream of this union. Almost the first act of my career as a preacher, when a boy of only eighteen years, was to write to a number of men of light and leading in our respective communions, asking if some way could not be devised for the union of these churches. It was out of a plentiful ignorance that I wrote, and my pen was held by clumsy fingers; but the ink was the blood of my heart.

If, then, I may not come with seasoned speech, I come with a passion and a plea—a passion for the realization of hopes long deferred; a plea that after a quarter of a century of talk and a decade of conferences and committee reports, something be accomplished, that there may be some definite program of procedure, some issuance beyond the picket-line of tentative suggestion upon the broad plain of a formulated appeal and unfearing overture.

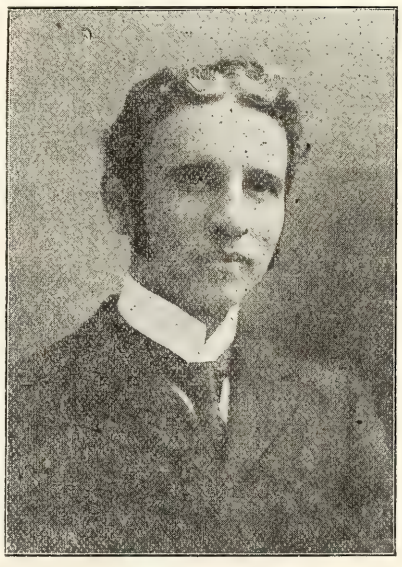
In the light of the noble utterances to which we have listened and the conferences already held, some things are now clear. We no longer need to ask, for instance, if this union is possible. So long as there is a greater difference between some Baptists and some other Baptists, between some Disciples and some other Disciples, than between "the typical Baptist church and the typical Christian church," as Dr. Dodd has concisely phrased it, the man who characterizes this talked-of union as impossible announces thereby that he is yet in the primer of intellectual discernment. That man would be more wisely concerned in finding his way home than in infantile attempts to cast the horoscope of the Church of God.

We are not only done with the word impossible in this connection, but also with its blood-sister undesirable. That this union, if it can be realized in intellectual honor and without conscience stultifications, would be undesirable, is the pronouncement of ignorance elevated to the thirty-third degree of a fossilized bigotry. The present apologist of disunion is as one born out of due season, a belated brother in our spiritual Altruria, an ecclesiastical ichthyosaurian whose anachronistic squinting mistakes for holy zeitgeist the dank and slime of other days. Or, if these similes be not to your liking, he is a militant Rip van Winkle, who, slumbering by the ashes of the camp fires of the yesterdays, mistakes his lusty snorings for pious defences of the faith.

No, we no longer say undesirable; but in its stead, another word, equally hindering, has a large place in our talk—distant. "Yes, it is coming," we say, "this union of Baptists and Disciples, but let us bear well in mind the truth that union is a growth, and not a manufactured thing, and growth is slow; that union can not be brought about by declarations and pronunciamentos, but through the slow maturings of evolutionary years; that weddings must be preceded by courtships, and wooings are long. Therefore, though the signs of an ultimate union are favoring, the bliss of the consummation is in the far-distant days." So!

With all deference, I seriously question these conclusions. Growth is not always slow. If the soil is poor and the skies are cold, growth is slow; but if the soil is rich and the skies are ardent, growth is rapid. It is true that the wedding must be preceded by the courtship, but if Darby spend two score years in courting Joan, we can but feel that no nuptial rapture can quite atone for his too slow wooing.

With equal earnestness do I protest against that complacency of philosophic outlook that would turn over the whole matter to what we shallowly dub "evolutionary forces." "It is an evolution," you say. Now what, precisely, do you mean by that? Nothing, precisely. It is just pure, unadulterated cant, or ignorance—or both. Evolution is a sort of magic waste basket, into which we drop the things we are too lazy or too indifferent to do ourselves, expecting that by some inexplicable wizardry of combining circumstances in indefinite time spaces, they will get themselves done. But they do not get themselves done in that way. Evolution is like a handmill; it grinds out the grist—if somebody turns the crank. I believe in evolution in the kingdom of God, but men have got to do the evolving. Things turn up when they are turned up. Baptists and Disciples won't just happen to get united—that union will come as the direct result of intelligent and consecrated Christian effort. If Darby expects evolution to help him to marry Joan, he would better help evolution by going a-courting and pressing with ardor his suit.



George H. Combs.

My brethren, dropping all similes, I ask, in plainest speech, why may we not dare to hope for a union of these sister churches, not in the dim after-while, but in your day and mine?

That there are difficulties in the way is freely granted; these difficulties should be frankly recognized. We can not get forward one inch just by closing our eyes. Unenlightened procedure would but bring us into a predicament similar to that of a pair of sweethearts, of whom I recently heard. They loved each other, he and she; but he was a Presbyterian and she a Baptist, and in conscience they felt they could not wed. The years passed by, and the lovers were growing old. He went to Europe, while she remained at home. The separation wrought a wonder, and two cablegrams passed each other in mid-ocean. His cablegram read: "Dear Mary: The obstacle to our union no longer exists. To-day I left the Presbyterian and joined the Baptist Church." Her message ran: "Dear John: Nothing is now between us, for to-day I left the Baptist Church and became a Presbyterian!"

No, we can not strike out in the dark. What, then, doth hinder? First of all, the inertia of indifference. It is the nature of all bodies to be at rest. The apple would stay forever on the stem if gravity did not pull it down; the ocean would slumber forever were it not clutched by the moon and whipped by the winds. And these two churches, being apart, will remain apart, if this inertia is not overcome.

Count, too, as a hindrance, the extremes of conservatism in both churches. These Christian brethren—I hope they are Christian—flout the very suggestion of union and brand as traitor the man who advocates it. They are not numerous, but they are noisy. There are Disciples among us—a few—who are by no means quite sure that Baptists can go to heaven; and there are Baptists, no doubt—a few— like the Baptist editor, who, when I yearningly asked him if he thought there was not a way for the union of the two churches, responded: "Yes. Let the Campbellites repent of their heresies and be scripturally baptized into the Baptist Church, and the union will be consummated."

I almost liked that—it was so delightfully simple. Yes, the extreme conservatives are to be reckoned with, and along with them many most excellent, though fearsome souls, who have a horror of change.

Then there are our differing nomenclatures and terminologies. Our words are strangers to one another. For example, the Baptists have a conference of workers and call it an "Association;" we call it a "Convention." For one, I like the Baptist word the better. It is good to "convene," but it is better to "associate" after you have convened. Then the Disciples call their presiding officer the "president," the Baptists, "moderator." These microscopic differences in terminology in our sermon and prayer vocabularies constitute a barrier.

The difficulty of our democratic form of government is not to be overlooked. Nowhere in either organization is there centrality of power. Each church is a law unto itself, and no ecclesiastical body can speak for each and all. How, then, as wholes, shall we move toward union? Well, the fact remains that somehow the Disciples and Baptists are bound together and certain coherent forces and influences do create and maintain a homogeneity which all must recognize. If, then, there shall come a real desire for union, despite all the hinderings of our extreme congregationalism, means will be found to express that desire and to concrete it in the actual solidities of an organic union.

Once more, we can not overlook the fact that our local experiments in union have not always been wholly satisfactory. This, in the very nature of the case, was inevitable, and should have been expected. There is always friction in the working of anything that is new. The path of the pioneer is always rough; the failures of the experimenter are more numerous than his successes. That the few churches that have essayed this union in the strange relationship in which they found themselves, without aught to blaze their way and with few to counsel, have not always been happy in the change is no argument against the union cause. Rather do they shame us in that we have left them to struggle alone.

And finally, as to difficulties, there are real minor differences among us, not merely in form and word and usage, but in thought. That we differ on any of the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity I do not believe. If there were such differences, then even the boon of union would be purchased at too great a cost. But minor differences there are and the danger is that in the too constant looking upon these difficulties our great elemental harmonies may be forgotten. I have heard of twin babies that so closely resembled each other that the mother, to distinguish them, tied a blue ribbon on the one and a red ribbon on the other. Now the attention could be so monopolized by the contrasts and the antagonisms of the red and blue ribbons that the twin likeness could be overlooked. Thus, too, of our churches. Instead, then, of coming with the microscope for critical differentiations, let us come with the telescope for largest synthesis of appreciation.

But after all is said, the fact remains that we are apart and that there are difficulties in the way of union. Let us recognize this fact, but recognize also that for any and all difficulties there are infallible solvents.

First, the Clear Gain and Good of This Union.

This has been so often and so eloquently set forth in our previous conferences that few words need be spoken. The economic waste in our present divisions in the unnecessary duplication of church buildings and equipment, missionary societies and agencies; the unholy rivalries and strifes, especially in rural communities; the loss to kindred souls of visible, concrete unities and fellowships, cry to the very heavens for redress. To say this union would not be productive of good were to say that a part is better than a whole, that the massed waters of the Mississippi are less powerful than the separate strengths of its tributary streams, that a harder blow can be struck with a single finger than with four clenched fingers and the bended thumb, that a detached soldiery fights with more effectiveness in its unrelatedness than as a part of an ordered army, that coherence and solidarity are less potent than chaos and huddles of fragments, that the patriot slogan of unity is but the yelp of a lie and that "united we fall; divided we stand."

There would be gain to both parties in this proposed union. To the Disciples, with their clear understanding of the commanding position, the superior numbers, the greater wealth of the Baptists, there need be no proof. But as the Baptist churches are strong in the east and south, where the Disciples are but feeble folk, it may not be amiss to say to the distinguished representatives of these honored churches that to this union the Disciples would not come to the altar as a dowerless bride. We, too, have something to offer. We should bring well nigh a half hundred colleges and universities, not rich in endowment, it is true, but rich in sacrifice and in the quest of highest scholarship; we should bring a score of religious papers, which, however differing among themselves as to ways and means for truth's forwarding, are one in loyalty to the cause they love; we should bring a religious force influential and respected, if not absolutely dominant in that coming seat of empire, the middle west; we should bring six thousand ministers of the gospel, not all highly cultured, but dowered with the high enthusiasms, the untamed eloquence that spring from a loyal heart; we should bring one and a quarter million disciples of our Lord Christ, who bear with conscious unworthiness and holy pride his sacred name, and who, for the sake of him and the union for which he prayed, stand ready to give up everything outside the boundaries of conscience claims that the Baptists and Disciples should be one. Brethren of the Baptist communion, would there not be gain?

Division is Sin.

Second, the sobering realization that the continuance of the division between Baptists and Disciples is sin.

Said Alexander Campbell, toward the close of his life, in speaking of this division: "It was a great mistake; it ought never to have been." A greater tolerance upon the one hand, a less precipitateness upon the other, and this tragical misfortune would have been averted. It "ought not to have been," and if it ought not to have been, it ought not to be. Fourscore years have not made it right. The alchemy of use can not whiten an evil into a good.

We are all advocates of unity—in the large. Some day, somehow, in misty dream, we look for its dear appearing, a coming unplanned for, unstriven for, let down as a gift from the skies. It will never come that way. Let us not delude ourselves. Divisions will not "fold their tents like the Arabs and silently steal away." They have got to be driven out at the very point of the bayonet. Union will come only through strong crying and agony of effort.

If we can not win the battle for union here it can be won nowhere. If these two churches, practically accordant in polity and usage, and one in loyalty to the catholic faith—if these two churches, knitted together by the rich heritage of a common history and high enthusiasm for common truths—if these churches, I say, can not unite, the dream of Church unity is but the bitter mocking of the mirage and all Protestant churches are loomed to walk forever alone.

But if they can unite, and do not unite, then to them, vaunted apostles of Bible ways, is sin—the sin of bigotry, the sin of sectarianism, the sin that broke the heart of Jesus of Nazareth and nailed his body to the bitter tree. Of our divided yesterdays let us hope in charity that "the times of this ignorance God winked at"—"but now he commandeth us to repent."

Our present division is sin—not merely an economic waste, not merely a useless perpetuation of costly machinery, not merely a long deference of cherished hopes—but sin, sin against the seamless mantle of our Lord, and against his high and priestly prayer.

Snail Creeping Out of Place.

If, then, this division be sinful, I modestly submit that all our pleasant euphemisms about slow growths, extended courtships and snail-creeping evolutionary forces are far afield. Sin is not to be cast out by such soporific similes; it is to be plucked up by heroic impulse of sacrificial love.

Permit me to say, in all kindness, that we have overworked that courting simile. It does not fit the case at all. Baptists and Disciples are not just now courting; they were married long ago, and it is not a courtship with which we have to do, but a divorce. And to the husband and wife who live apart there is but one word: "Go back, now, before the sun sets; go back to each other; go back home!"

Another solvent is prayer. This was the Master's way. He craved the unity of his disciples. For the sake of the world's salvation he sought it—and how? Through prayer. He did not argue for it; he prayed. Ah, how we have forgotten his way!

The Disciples and Baptists have passed through three stages. First was the era of controversy. We were valiant in polemics. Debates were the order of the day. Those were the strenuous times when the Baptists were all "sectarians" and Disciples were all "Campbellites." We were sincere then, even as we are sincere now; but did we pray—pray for the union of our separated forces and all for the sake of love? I offer no criticisms, but no one can say that the atmosphere of heated controversy is ideally conducive to petitionings for unity. When men are shying brickbats at each other's heads they are seldom praying for the union of each other's hearts.

Then we came to the era of toleration. We no longer fought; we passed each other on the street with a bow. Were we praying, those days, for unity? Folks don't pray for bowing acquaintances. So long as a man is merely a stranger, to whom I doff my hat, I shall make no strenuous effort to bring him to my fireside, nor fall into any fervency of prayer that he be brought to an unwelcoming place in my home.

Then we came to the era of sympathy and conference, of personal good will and convention-unity programs. This is well, but it is not all. Are we earnestly praying for union? In our pulpits and in our closets are we praying for it?

A Week of Prayer.

Great words have been spoken in our conferences, but the most important is that of a Baptist brother who declared that every Sunday, for twenty years, he had been praying for the union of these peoples.

Ah, if only we would pray more! Speech is good; pronunciamentos are good; conferences are good, but only as they be thrown upon the great tidal waves of prayer that shall bear them to the continent-hearts of man and God. I should like to make a suggestion to this convention, and I trust it may be acted upon—that we ask our Baptist brethren, through their proper agencies, to join us in observing a "week of prayer"—a week incidentally for discussion, but primarily a week for pleading prayer that our brotherhoods may be one. Nobody could object to that—not even our most conservative brethren of both communions, and yet I honestly believe that such a week of prayer would be followed by an eternity of unity, and that through the straining gates of holy petitionings we should enter into the heaven of an enduring concord and should be caught up in the rapture of love's holy hymn:

> "Blest be the tie that binds
> Our hearts in Christian love."

A Passion Needed.

And lastly, as to solvents, a passion for this unity. Heat is axial. Fire is king. Passion is the true worker of miracles. It is so in the world beneath us. The summer has gone, the autumn flown, and the world is cold and dead. Brown is the grass, ice-locked are the rivers, songless the forests, pulseless the heart of the flower seeds, and over all is stretched in quiet the shroud of the winter snow. How can the dead world be brought to life? You may pound it with the thunders, scar it with the lightnings, whip it with the winds, pelt it with the hails, but all in vain. Still sere and brown the grass, still silent is the forest, still ice-chained is the river, still unbeating the life in the heart of the seed of the flower. But let the spring sun come and its warm rays flood the earth, and lo! the grass brightens into greenness, unlocked rivers flow in music, the fields are covered with flowers, the forests thick with singing birds, and Life, tumultuous, happy Life flings wide its golden carols over all the world.

Heat is king in the world of nature, and passion is king in the human heart.

Our brotherhoods are indifferent to this great matter; their hearts are cold. What shall we do? Shall we spit them on the icicles of our arguments? Shall we hammer them with our convention utterances? Shall we strive to wake them with the trumpet of golden speech? It can not be done that way. It must be done through a passionate enthusiasm. It must be done through an ardent desire. It must be done through the fervor of love, the pleading beseechment, the breaking of a heart over the division that is sin.

Given this passion and it were done. We talk much of the difficulties in the way. Let but the heart be hot, and men will no longer talk of difficulties, but achievements, and setting their faces against the impossible, work the wonders that startle the world.

Difficulties and seeming disasters fronted the brave Continentals in the trial days of Valley Forge, but in their fervent love of country they forgot their bleeding feet and starving bodies and dreamed of victories to come. Difficulties frowned at John Knox as, all alone, he pitted himself against the very throne; yet because of his molten earnestness he dared the unequal combat, and in giant wrestlings with untoward circumstances in very anguish of tears cried out, "Give me Scotland or I die!" Difficulties met the Italian, Savonarola, yet, consumed by a loyalty that was flame, he braved Lorenzo in his marble palace and whelmed the infidelities of a corrupt city beneath the lava floods of his holy enthusiasm. Difficulties gloomed the path of the Crusaders, dangers by land and sea, disease and Moslem sword, yet because of the passion in their wild, hot hearts they startled the world with the cry that thrills us yet—"On, on to the Holy Sepulchre!"

Before a consecrated enthusiasm nothing can stand. Oh, for some Garibaldi of the Church, who shall enthrall us with the vision of a united Christendom! Oh, for some Patrick Henry of the pulpit, who, with heart of fire and words of flame shall thrill us with his passionate cry, "Give me union or I die!" Union; not merely liberty, but liberty and union.

Martyrs to Union.

Many are the martyrs of liberty. The earth is white with their bleached bones; the heavens are thick-set with their starred names. Honored be their memories forever! But the day shall come, yea, and now is, when the Church with no lessening emphasis upon liberty shall be willing to pour out its very blood for the sacred cause of union. For these two must go together, and are necessary complements each of the other. You can not have freedom without union, for liberty is not in isolation, but in relationships. "Liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable."

Yes, we have had our martyrs to liberty. Shall we not have our martyrs to union, as well? These, too, we have. A southerner myself, my kinsmen all following the flag of the stars and bars, I hesitate not to remind you that beneath these very southern skies men laid down their lives upon the altar of the Union; and yonder on the red hills of Georgia, beneath the cypress of Louisiana, under the pines of the Carolinas, in the quiet valley of the Shenandoah, these martyrs sleep, waiting for the reveille of the eternal morning. Soft be their slumbers, untroubled their dreams; green be their graves through the fall of our tears. These did not die in vain. Over their graves, heaped high with flowers, the north and the south, once severed, clasp hands in an enduring concord.

"The union of lakes and the union of lands,
The union of stars none can sever,
The union of hearts and the union of hands
And the flag of our union forever."

Thank God for a reunited country! Pray God for a reunited Church.

Brethren, it may seem but a poor and braggart word, inasmuch as there is no way to test it, but as God knows my heart, so do I feel the needlessness, the hurt, the sin of the separation of these churches that I should be willing to give up what years may yet be mine—every one of them—willing to breathe my last breath on this platform and have my poor body sent back to the church that loves me, if by the laying down of my life this cause I love might be advanced. I long, oh, I so long for this union!

The Church on Trial.

No doubt to those of us who have spoken on this subject may have come the suggestion that our words on this important occasion will be carefully weighed and strict account be taken as to whether we slacken in our loyalties to our respective churches—that we who speak here are on trial and must be careful of our words. Ah, it is not we who speak here who are on trial; it is the churches for whom we speak, the six million Baptists and Disciples who, haled before the judgment seat of God, must give an account of what they do in this great hour.

I yield to no man in loyalty to Our Plea. I love our beautiful name. I love our beautiful formulation, "Where the Bible speaks we speak; where the Bible is silent we are silent;" I love the simplicities of our honored church. Through four generations my people have been loyal to that plea. My great-grandfather was one of the charter members and a life-long elder of the old Cane Ridge Church, and the blood that runs in my veins is without a single doctrinal taint. I love my brethren; from unlettered laborer to cultured scholar, of all schools and of no school, I love them all. But in this presence I have striven to forget what any of my brethren might say, and to think only of Another and what He would have me say.

My brethren, if He were here, what would he bid us do? Ah, how would that Presence shame us in our petty pride of numbers, our sectarian littleness, our partisan shibboleths! Though he should speak never a word, how he would rebuke us for our gloryings in aught save his sacred cross!

If he should speak, what think you he would say? Would he discourage us with a vision of the difficulties in our way? Would he bid us seek this unity, but seek it in great leisureliness? Or would he not rather say, "My children, while you tarry, my kingdom tarrieth, my work is hindered. My business requireth haste. For my sake ye say ye have lived apart. It is a strange matter. If you love me, love one another, and live and work together in the bonds of brotherhood."

And if he should pray? If he should kneel upon this platform, as he knelt on Olivet, and those dear hands, nail prints in them now, were lifted up in prayer to God, and if upon our ears should fall his pleading words, "Father, may they be one" could we, could we say him nay?

If Jesus were here! My brethren, Jesus is here—here in the hot cells of our thinking, in the fervor of our longing, in prayer and speech, in tear and throbbing hearts—here to bless and here to lead us on.

O Master: Do thou help us, teach us what to say! Show us what to do that we may bring thy people into oneness of work and life, to the end that we may the more perfectly do thy holy will. Amen.

Let Us Do.

I conclude as I began: Let us do something. In the presence of the great non-Christian world, confused by our divisions and the warring jangles of our shibboleths; in the presence of the churches of the Orient, that for very life's sake are reaching out for the strength of solidarities and recovering a unity which the west has lost; in the presence of the great union movements at home among the churches far more widely separated than our own; in the presence of common foes, the massed might of that trinity of evils, the saloon, the brothel, the infidelities that strike at hearth and home, let us have done with our cool cautions, the academic balancings of scholastic disquisitions, and, most of all, with our complacent, slow-going ways, and forgetting everything save that we are brethren, fling ourselves into this union propaganda with the very abandon of love. Let this convention say to the committee to whose hands this great matter has been committed, that "the King's business requireth haste," that we expect of them no indefinite tarryings in the exchanges of fraternity, no wearying postponement of plain duties, but that they abide together in prayer until the way of the Lord shall be opened, and they shall have agreed upon a program of procedure that shall make our peoples one.

Honored brethren of a sister communion, go back to your people bearing to them the loving greeting of this great assembly. Tell them of this notable union that ought to be; tell them of our common faith and hope and love; tell them that for the sake of union we were willing to give up anything and everything but Christ; tell them, not that we are merely ready to consider some plan of union, but tell them that on the ultimate principles of our common faith we are ready to unite. God grant that ere many winters shall have come and gone the sun may rise upon our united hosts,—upon six million Baptists and Disciples, who with clasped hands and locked hearts are singing through their tears:

"We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in faith and doctrine,
One in charity."

God speed the day!

THAT THEY ALL MAY BE ONE.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

That they all may be one!
One in heart, one in mind, one in aim,
That the whole world may come to believe
In the matchless, ineffable Name.

That they all may be one!
May no strife or vainglory divide,
Lest the world in confusion shall turn
From the light, and in darkness abide.

That they all may be one!
Thus He prayed ere He died for the gain
Of a sin-burdened race. Son of God,
Shall we render Thy heart's desire vain!

A SYMPOSIUM.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR THE CENTENNIAL.

By E. L. Powell.

We are confronted, within a few months of our great Centennial, with the tremendous issue—shall Dr. Willett's name remain on our Centennial program? After planning, praying, working for these several years past to bring together one of the greatest religious conventions ever held in the West, we find ourselves Willettized so completely that when the great host shall gather it will be under the spell and personality of our very delightful, charming and scholarly Willett. If some speakers shall emphasize the fundamental creed—personal, conscious loyalty to Jesus Christ as the Son of God—the great multitude will think of our good friend Willett as standing heroically and in the very spirit of martyrdom for this mighty truth. If another shall declare the fundamental spirit of Puritanism—the right to think and let think—we shall, thanks to our dear Doctor Willett for his championship of this rule, which every man of us has been putting in practice since he was able to "subtend an angle in the horizon of thought." If some of us refer to the virgin birth, or the miracles, or the atonement, or inspiration, and shall proclaim some of the commonplaces of present-day religious thought on these questions, a mighty company will be ready to say, Has not Prof. Willett admitted everything which the speaker has set forth? Who hath bewitched us? Willett. How has it been possible for Mr. Willett's personality to divert us from our great Centennial enterprise? Mr. Willett is not to be blamed. The Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, either as the result of malice or for the purpose of making money, or, shall we say, influenced by a great, Christian, magnanimous spirit, which would throw its arms of protection around this wayward son of Chicago University, has enlisted thousands in the cause of Willett who otherwise would have gone on loving him and letting him do his work in quietness. If Mr. Willett cares for eminence—an eminence altogether apart from his worth and ability—he has surely great reason to be grateful to the Christian Standard. If the brotherhood has waited long for a brilliant and fascinating hero, one around whose classic brows a laurel wreath would be most fitting, we have to thank the Christian Standard for having furnished him. What is the matter with Brother Willett? He tells us that he is not even sick when his symptoms are considered by this great diagnostician of authority, our own McGarvey, of Lexington. Does not Prof. Willett believe in the virgin birth? Yes. Does he not believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the Savior of sinners? Yes. Mr. Willett tells us that he accepts it all, in Willett's way, just as Prof. McGarvey accepts it all, in Mr. McGarvey's way. Is there any other way in which anybody can accept truth? What, then, is the occasion of this excitement? Where is the fire? What need of rushing to the defense of Dr. Willett? One thinks of the bashful young fellow at the circus who, upon perceiving considerable commotion under the circus tent, thought the whole concern was to be burned up, and seized his opportunity to lay hold of the girl and bear her out protesting. There was no fire. If Mr. Willett wants to stay on the program—and nobody has by authority asked him to withdraw—then let him make his speech. But in the name of that composure which we ought to have learned after one hundred years, let us not mistake the rumbling of cart-wheels for thunder. Right of way for the Centennial!

Louisville, Ky.

CUI BONO?

Will some expert mathematician kindly estimate the good this Willett controversy will accomplish? Would not the same amount of energy devoted to emphasizing the importance of a life of service and showing the value of faith, hope and love do vastly more good? Brother Willett's case, as presented by the Christian Standard and the Christian Century, reminds me of a poem of Paul Laurence Dunbar, which I enclose. Fraternally, H. G. Hedden.

THE LAWYERS' WAYS.

BY PAUL LAURENCE DUNBAR.

I've been list'nin' to them lawyers,
In the court house up the street,
An' I've come to the conclusion
That I'm most completely beat.
Fust one feller riz to argy,
An' he boldly waded in,
An' he dressed the tremblin' pris'ner
In a coat of deep-dyed sin.

Why, he painted him all over
In a hue of blackest crime,
An' he smeared his reputation
With the thickest kind o' grime.
Tell I found myself a-wonderin',
In a misty way and dim,
How the Lord had come to fashion
Sich an awful man as him.

Then the brother lawyer started,
An' with brimmin', tearful eyes,
Said his client was a martyr
That was brought to sacrifice.
An' he give to that same pris'ner
Every blessed, human grace,
Tell I saw the light of virtue
Fairly shinin' from his face.

Then I own 'at I was puzzled
How sich things could rightly be;
An' this aggervatin' question
Seems to keep a-puzzlin' me.
So, will some one please inform me,
An' this mystery unroll—
How an angel an' a devil
Can persess the self-same soul?

A PLEA FOR PEACE.

By Bruce Brown.

I want to plead with all my power that the whole controversy about the views of certain preachers and teachers be dropped. Such questions can not be settled by arguments or resolutions.

The forthcoming United States census will show one division among our people. We do not want another. The extreme conservative element will appear under a separate name, "The Church of Christ," with separate papers, schools, etc. What the civil war could not do, a factional spirit is doing. A great people standing fundamentally and elementally for Christian union are dividing!

Here is the practical side that must engage our attention sooner or later; and may Heaven grant that the people may see it before they have exhausted themselves in useless controversy! That company of preachers and people who may be said to belong to the advanced school in their theological views will not and can not be driven from the church. The number of such persons, in my judgment, is many fold larger that any estimate that has yet been given.

Those who oppose the views of this school of thought can not be excommunicated. We have no central judicial authority and have always protested against the existence of such an authority. Neither side can be whipped into silence. Our only hope is light and love and charity. None of these can be administered with a club. To continue the fight is to widen the breach and create another great schism. The anti-conservative brethren have long been a separate people, openly avowing their denominational existence; but that is not now a matter of great importance. But a new schism on the party lines now being drawn will cleave our strong churches and great brotherhood through the heart. Let this and all similar controversies stop!

I do not mean to imply that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been responsible for this controversy. But it could have no place if it were not for our papers. If THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will set the example by absolutely ignoring it, we have other papers, I believe, that will do the same. Let one or two keep it up, if they will. The harm will be greatly lessened and they will do it at their peril. Let one paper try to continue the agitation alone, and it will come to naught. This is a serious question only so far as the people take it seriously, and develop rancor. If a permanent schism is made it will be because we are little people and unworthy of our great plea.

WHAT SHOULD DETERMINE?

By S. S. Jones.

Replying to your inquiry I would say: The line between faith and opinion is not clearly drawn, but if a man believes in Jesus as the Christ of God, accepts him as Savior, Lord and Master, and is loyal to him in teaching and life, I would not question his Christianity or his loyalty to the spirit of our movement no matter what his views might be on other things. He might hold to the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch or he might not; he might claim there were two Isaiahs or he might not; he might claim that Jonah is literal history or he might not; he might place the book of Daniel in the time of the Maccabees, or he might not. His attitude toward Jesus and his teaching is the one thing that should determine his standing among the Disciples of Christ.

A GOD-GIVEN RIGHT.

By W. L. Hayden.

"I will show mine opinion." "In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty." Faith looks toward the divine and accepts the light of revelation. Hence nothing is a matter of faith for which there can not be produced a "Thus saith the Lord" in express terms or approved precedent. Here must be unity, for all believers are bound to hear and do. Opinion looks toward the human and concedes equality that accords to others what each claims for himself. Its scope is the inferential, the incidental and the discretionary. Here must be liberty for the exercise of human reason in progressive knowledge and personal judgment. This is a God-given right and a solemn duty that no man may invade nor deny.

SOME OF OUR BIBLE SCHOOLS

JOHNSON CITY, TENN.

S. W. Price, supt.; W. E. Hatcher, asst. supt.; Miss Mollie Kitzmiller, secretary; J. W. Millard, treasurer. Enrollment, 620; average attendance, 450.

This school has a mixed class of adults enrolling 230, of which J. E. Crouch is the teacher. There are 70 in its class of young men, taught by T. E. Utterback, while the primary has 150 enrolled under Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Hardin, teachers. The enrollment of the teacher-training class is 50. The school is supplied with charts and blackboards, and has fourteen class rooms. The average collection is $13, and this is raised by voluntary contributions in each class. all missionary days are observed. Mr. Millard, the treasurer, writes as follows: "Our Bible school was organized December 1, 1879. The average attendance for the first quarter of 1880 was 20. J. C. Hardin was superintendent for about ten years. Our church was small and the school grew until in 1900 an addition was made to the building. In 1905 our church building was burned, and the building in which we now worship was finished in 1906. The church auditorium and Sunday-school rooms can be thrown together, making a seating capacity of about 1,200. The building is heated by hot air furnaces and lighted by electricity. The campaign for increased attendance began with the beginning of 1907, when our enrollment was about 250. This great school has been built up by the consecrated work of our superintendent, backed by the united efforts of competent, godly teachers."

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.

J. W. Lanter, supt.; Mrs. A. O. Haller, sec.; Elmer Shirrel, treas. Enrollment, 150; average attendance, 110.

This school has a primary department and organized classes. "The Light Bearers" consist of young ladies from 14 to 20. The motto of the Gideon Club is "Men at work for men." The "Four C's" class consists of young men from 16 to 20 years of age. There is a union teacher-training class, and the collections run form $3.50 to $5 weekly, and class envelopes are used. Children's days for both home and foreign missions are observed, and the birthday box is used. The offering this year was $30 for foreign, and $25.05 for home. A Sunday-school bus is used to go to the outskirts of the city to get the children that could not go to Sunday-school at all. This costs $2.50 a Sunday, and part of this money is raised by special subscriptions. A secretary is appointed to look after and collect these subscriptions. Brother Lauter has a meeting for teachers ten or fifteen minutes before the Sunday-school hour for purposes of prayer, and keeps before the teachers each Lord's day the importance of the winning of souls. A revival in the church has just been closed, and fully one-half the converts were from the school. The superintendent says: "Our pastor, Sumner T. Martin, is a great big man spiritually, and we are looking forward for greater things under his leadership. I am yours for a greater Bible school in 1909."

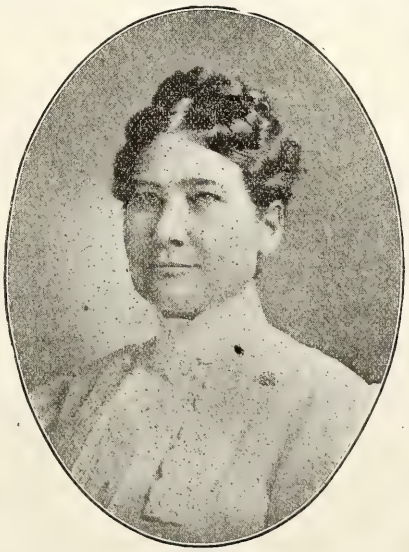
NORMAL, ILL.

First Christian.

Miss Medora Schaeffer, supt.; Harry E. Kearfott, sec.; Gertrude Heller, treas. Enrollment, 225, average attendance, 175.

This school has twelve classes, including a men's class taught by the pastor, and a woman's taught by Mrs. Brock. There is, also, a teacher-training class. The building is not adapted to modern Sunday-school methods, but a new building is one of the hopes. There are maps, blackboards, and an excellent supply of material in the shape of literature like the Young Evangelist, Young Folks, and other Christian Publishing Company's supplies, and the Sunday-School Times. The average collection is about $4.28. The mission offering last year was something more than $100. It is collected on special days, the first Sunday in each month of the first quarter being for benevolence; in the second quarter for foreign missions; the third quarter for home missions. The two rally days are observed. Miss Schaeffer has been the leader for nearly fifteen years. The people co-operate with her in the most cordial way and make it possible to have a good and interesting school. A new building is much needed. As it is, an adjoining room is rented for one class of students. This school organized a sort of deposit for the children last April. The children deposit their pennies just as they would in a savings bank. A special secretary takes charge of the work, each child having its own personal account folder, and the secretary keeps a complete ledger account. One of the members, Mr. Dillon, is treasurer, and pays the children interest on their deposits. About sixty children are patrons of this safety fund, and nearly $50 is deposited to their account. This helps to train the children to have a respect for money and its legitimate use. Once a year there is a special social feature known as the "Harvest Home." The school has full control, and booths are assigned to the various classes. Supper is served in a kind of progressive way, and the occasion is supported by all the churches. The school has pledged $25 for the coming year, to make the church a state living link. Its superintendent was township superintendent of the Bible schools for the year, and at her suggestion a union picnic was held, which was a great success. This year attention was paid to family attendance at the rally day services. In its one contest with a sister school the First Christian won, and its average attendance is about fifty more than last year.



Miss Medora Schaeffer,
Superintendent at Normal, Ill.

GREENVILLE, ILL.

E. W. Miller supt.; Sam Wannamaugher, vice-pres.; Louise File, sec.; Stella Anderson, treas.; Vern Jett, organist. Enrollment, 210; average attendance, 150.

This school has a teacher-training class, and the collections amount to about $4 per week. The information sent does not cover all points that we were seeking light upon.

WATSONVILLE, CALIFORNIA.

First Christian.

H. C. Weisenburger, supt.; D. F. Stafford, assistant; Lee Tibbals, sec. and treas.; D. H. Tibbals, chorister; Miss Pearl Stow, assistant sec.; Mrs. O. Morse, organist; Miss Effie Seitz, assistant organist; Mrs. M. P. Scott, supt. primary; D. F. Stafford, pastor. Enrollment, 233, average attendance, 165.

The school is graded, having primary, intermediate, adult classes, and home department. There are 35 members doing fine work in the Philathea. There are two good teacher-training classes. In the way of equipment there are separate class rooms and a special department for the primary, blackboards, maps and charts, and appropriate Sunday-school supplies, class records, etc., are employed. The weekly collection averages over $5. Tithing is encouraged, and everyone trained to give something, the teacher setting the example. The school gave $50 for missions this year, but its members helped to raise the $10,000 debt on the church, hence its mission collections were not as large as they otherwise would have been.

IN KOREA WITH MARQUIS ITO. By George Trumbull Ladd, LL. D. pp. 476. Price $2.50, net. Charles Scribner's Sons.

Here we have a narrative of personal experiences and a critical historical inquiry with reference to a country that is one of the most interesting in all the world. Prof. Ladd, after lecturing in Japan, at the invitation of the government, was invited by Marquis Ito to accompany him to Korea to lecture to the Koreans. Based upon a few months of experience in that country, of which he gained a first hand, and, considering the time he was there, a very intimate knowledge, we have this volume. It is admirably illustrated, and will be exceedingly helpful in presenting a vivid picture of this interesting country. Prof. Ladd's account of missions and missionaries will, perhaps, appeal especially to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We should rather have the opinions on this subject of some of the men who have been longer in the country, yet one may get helpful suggestions from an independent student and traveler like Prof. Ladd. Other subjects he deals with are resources and finance, education and public justice, foreigners and foreign relations, while his sketches of Korean life are graphic and entertaining.

ISLAM AND CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA AND THE FAR EAST. By E. M. Wherry. pp. 287. Price $1.25, net. Fleming H. Revell.

Dr. Wherry is an expert in the field which this book traverses. For thirty years he has been a missionary of the Presbyterian Church in India, and has, therefore, had opportunity of studying the religion of Islam. It is not, perhaps, widely realized that there are more than sixty million Moslems in that country, thirty million in China, and thirty million more in Malaysia and the East Indies. The effort in this book is to set forth the facts and conditions under which Islam has been propagated in these countries and how Christianity has established its missions for the evangelization of non-Christians, Moslems included. Dr. Wherry shows how these Moslems came over, how their religion has been modified by Hinduism, Buddhism and Confucianism. He gives an opinion as to what hope there is in dealing with them, and suggests ways and means. While the book will probably appeal to a limited class, it ought to be in the library of everyone interested in missions.

THOUGHTS FOR LIFE'S JOURNEY. By George Matheson. pp. 287. Price, $1.25, net. A. C. Armstrong and Son.

Dr. Matheson stood alone as a writer of devotional sermonettes. He was a poetical expositor of charming originality. He would take a text, and in two or three hundred words preach a sermon that would appeal to the intellect, touch the heart and delight the senses. This book contains 86 of these short, polished, religious talks, dealing with varied subjects.

THE CHARACTER OF JESUS. Charles E. Jefferson, D. D. pp. 353. Price, $1.50, net. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.

This new book by the pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, consists of sermons delivered on Sunday evenings, and are simply studies in the character of Jesus, the purpose of the preacher being to incite professing Christians to a deeper devotion to their Master, and to awaken in non-Christians a desire to know more of the Founder of the Christian Church, and to persuade them to become his followers. We are told that the congregations were composed largely of young men, and that it is in response to numerous requests from them that the sermons are now published. Dr. Jefferson is a strong man, and occupies a medium position between the conservative and radical forces in the religious world. The critical point of view of the book may be gauged from the statement of the preacher that "the men who represent the Gospels are," in his judgment, "more trustworthy than any of the men who have attempted to discredit them." The first three chapters are introductory, giving reasons for the study, and the sources; these are followed by twenty-three sermons on the various phases of the character of Christ, taking up his sincerity, his poise, his originality, his brotherliness, his indignation, etc. The conclusion of the preacher is that Christ is the ideal of the heart, the goal of humanity, and the image of God.

HANDWORK IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL. By Milton S. Littlefield. The Sunday School Times Company, Philadelphia. $1.00.

The title announces at once the character of this timely book. The problem of class interest and control, to say nothing of the problem of symmetrical and fascinating teaching, will become simpler to the teacher who has this book. Careful description accompanied by full page illustrations tells ambitious teachers what they wish to know concerning geography work, illustrative work, notebook work and decorative work. The introduction by DuBois and the first chapter are very helpful, as well.

COUNSELS BY THE WAY. By Henry Van Dyke. pp. 160. Price, $1.00, net. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.

Dr. Van Dyke needs neither introduction nor commendation. He stands in the front rank as a writer, preacher and critic. This book represents his more serious work, yet those who have been delighted by his charming nature studies will find no less pleasure in such essays as "The Haven of Character," "The Battle of Life," "The Good Old Way," and even "The Poetry of the Psalms." These are some of the essays in this beautifully printed volume, which preserves in permanent library style five essays which have previously been issued in booklet form.

THE TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. By John Fox, Jr. Price $1.50. Charles Scribner's Sons.

This is one of the healthiest, as well as one of the most interesting, pieces of fiction that has come from the press for some time. One may not admit it among the best examples of literary workmanship, but it is wholesome, virile, and at the same time delicate. The scene is laid in the Cumberland Mountains, and the plot gathers around a mountain girl, who comes out from the ignorance of her surroundings to grow into a beautiful woman of education and charm and a young American who goes into these mountains to master their problems and win from them their wealth. Mr. Fox knows his field well. He shows an intimate acquaintance with the primitive life, and presents it, with its rawness and its feuds, in a striking manner. But his character delineation of men is not more noticeable than his intuitions about women. His heroine is one that will be with us long. His last book is the best he has written.

Is it worth while to have another book on Palestine? Yes, indeed, when Mr. Grant writes it, and it is published in the style in which the present volume has been sent forth. The writer of the book has wandered into comparatively unknown fields. He undertakes to show us the life, manners and customs of the people in this remote country, has been a close observer, and has the literary power to give us a vivid picture of the personal and social life of Christian and Moslem that will be valuable to the Bible student and interesting to the man who merely seeks instruction, or reads for pure pleasure. The book is admirably illustrated, and is one that should have a wide circulation.

CHRIST'S TABLE TALK. A Study in the Method of our Lord. By Eugene Russell Hendrix, D. D., LL.D., one of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Publishing House of M. E. Church South: Nashville, Tenn., Dallas, Texas. Price $1 net.

Bishop Hendrix has the reputation of being a great preacher. This book shows him to be a writer of striking ability and a man of spiritual force. One can not read these chapters on Christ's great conversations without a deepened impression of the wisdom and spiritual authority of Christ's words, and an increased desire to know him better. There is not in the entire book a sectarian or denominational note. It is a broad, Christian and spiritual treatment of the words of our Master. We should love to quote from it at length, but we prefer that our readers would secure the book and read it entire. Bishop Hendrix has enhanced his reputation and extended his usefulness in writing this volume, which does credit alike to its head and its heart.

Our Budget

—"Let us have peace!"

—Everybody fall in line for our great Centennial!

—Education, missions and benevolence to the front, and all side issues relegated to the rear!

—One of our Centennial aims is the increase of the circulation of our religious journals. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST appeals to its friends to co-operate with it in this work, to the end that its sphere of usefulness may be greatly increased.

—We make this appeal to those only who believe that the increased circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST means increased prosperity for our cause, and a wider and clearer knowledge of the things for which we stand as a religious movement.

—It is a time when intelligent and conscientious people should study the character and influence of the religious journal they patronize and help to circulate. Will it help or hinder our work?

—No more potent force for good or for evil exists among us than our religious journals, which may either sow seeds of strife and dissension, or of unity and fraternity. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

—The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is glad to announce, in response to many inquiries which are coming to him, that his health has been quite fully restored, and that he is feeling as well and as vigorous as he has for many years past. For this fact, and for the solicitude of his many friends, he can not sufficiently express his gratitude.

—A business man writes: "In the last two months I have put THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into about fifty families on the three months' trial." If all our friends to whom we made a personal appeal to help us in this way had done as well as this brother, think of what a service it would be, not simply for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but for the Cause which it serves! Many of our friends have done well in response to our request, but many others have, as yet, made no response.

—Dr. William Thompson is to hold a meeting for the church at Lineberry, Ill., in January.

—A. M. Adams has succeeded Dr. T. W. Bellingham as pastor of the church at Fremont, Mich.

—A. L. McQuary will spend his winter at Carthage, Mo., returning to Camp Clark again in the spring.

—Evangelist Beach preached the union Thanksgiving sermon at Perkins, Okla., while holding a meeting there.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will dedicate at Mill City, Kan., Dec. 20. Charles A. Early leads the forces there.

—R. Russell is preaching in a good meeting at Arrowsmith, Ill., being assisted in the music by Miss Anna Shade, of Bloomington.

—George L. Snively and C. H. Altheide are to hold a meeting in January for the church at Marshall, Mo. "We expect a fine meeting," writes Brother Wharton.

—Report has it that Ben F. Hill, of Okmulgee, Okla., has a longing for old scenes, and may be induced ere long to return to Missouri. We shall be glad to see him back.

—Since 1895 E. L. Shelnutt has organized more that 20 churches in the cities, towns and country in Georgia, and reorganized another in South Carolina, and evangelized in several other states.

—The church at Abilene, Kan., where Clifford A. Cole ministers, reached its apportionment for state missions, raising $43, while its C. W. B. M. gained 30 per cent in members in their special rally.

—Since taking the work at Lees Summit, Mo., by Lee H. Barnum, there has been a gain in every direction. The church had been without a preacher for some time. The C. W. B. M. offering was more than $10.

—J. Q. Biggs has declined a call for the third year from the church at Golden City, Mo., and will close his work January 1. A successor is wanted for this field at once. None but hard-working men need apply. Address Miss Kate DeWeese.

—The church at Latham, Ill., observed State Mission Day with an offering of $40. The Bible school observed Children's Day for Home Missions, giving $9 to that cause. Funds are being raised and plans perfected looking to the erection of a new church building. Clifford S. Weaver enthusiastically leads the work here.

—T. W. Phillips, of New Castle, Pa., was a delegate to the Federal Council in Philadelphia. We were glad to see our business men represented in a movement that especially appeals to that class of men because of its great economic value as well as because of the large scale on which it proposes to carry on the work of the kingdom.

—We regret to learn of the death of C. A. Hicks, the beloved pastor of churches at Pomona, Willow Springs and Mountain Grove, Mo., where he had been at work for the past four years. He was one of our bright and talented young ministers and battled bravely. In another column we hope to present fuller particulars.

—E. J. Williams, 2837 Coleman Ave., Maplewood Heights, St. Louis county, Mo., desires to correspond with churches needing a minister, and is prepared to give references to those desiring them. Brother Williams has given satisfaction where he has hitherto labored. Churches desiring a minister on very reasonable terms may address him as above.

—There was a deficit of several hundred dollars in our apportionment for carrying on the work of the Federal Council. The delegates promised to raise from $10 to $20 each, in their home churches, and forward the money to the Editor of this paper. May we not have the assistance of others, who did not incur the expense of the trip to Philadelphia?

—R. Graham Frank has been holding a union meeting for the Baptist and Christian churches at Excelsior Springs, Mo. W. I. Cole is pastor of the Baptist church, and J. W. Gresham of the Christian church. This, we believe, is the first instance when such a meeting has been held at this place. The attendance was fine and the spirit admirable.

—The observance of C. W. B. M. day at Kendallville, Ind., was a great occasion. A. B. Houze made the address, and his wife and Mrs. Forest Butts led the campaign for new members, of whom 96 were enrolled. The church has recently installed a new heating plant at an expense of $750, which gives it the best equipped house in the city.

—"Allow me to thank you for the Christian attitude through the columns of your paper toward some problems before our people. It is a source of encouragement to turn to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST after reading some of the threats of certain journals to 'keep up the fight,' and find Christ walking on the troubled waters. This spirit alone can endure."—W. D. Trumbull.

—A. W. Kokendoffer delivered the sermon at the union Thanksgiving service held in the M. E. Church at Sedalia, Mo. He mentioned four special reasons why we should give thanks. First, our prosperous country; second, the rift in the clouds of partisan politics; third, the growth in temperance reform; and lastly, the union movement in all the churches.

—J. B. Boen has been six months with the church at Waxahachie, Tex. During this period there have been at regular services 44 additions, a Junior Endeavor Society, and a Bible class of 50 organized. Many improvements have been made in the equipment, and offerings taken for Church Extension, State and District work, etc., involving an outlay of more than $1,000, in addition to the current expenses.

—W. W. Burks, of Nevada, Mo., having declined the call extended to him by the West Fifty-sixth Street Church, New York City, for family reasons, Brother Robert Christie informs us that Brother William L. Fisher, recently returned from Oxford, England, was invited to visit the church, and received a unanimous call to become its pastor, which he has accepted. He will begin laboring with the church January 1, 1909.

—Joel Brown has been in a meeting at Brashear, Mo., where there were twenty-one additions up till the night before closing. There was raised $500 to pay all indebtedness, paint the church and purchase an individual communion set, besides $450 to pay for half-time preaching. A minister is wanted who will live at Brashear, and give half of his time to contiguous churches. Those interested may write to Dr. James Hanks.

—Evangelist William Thompson is in a meeting with the church at Minonk, Ill. The history of this congregation is worthy of note. About five years ago the church was practically lifeless, the building being dilapidated, and only a few members in the town; but with the help of Eureka, a few faithful ones were able to resuscitate the cause, and it is now growing. It is, however, weak financially, and the undertaking of a meeting will be quite a burden which F. M. Morgan, the pastor, says "this little congregation will be glad to have outside interested brethren share."

—The young people's department of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will, this year, have a joint observance of the Centennial of our religious movement and the quarter Centennial of the existence of the department. It is hoped that at least 100 children's organizations will each give $100 to the mission funds of the department in celebration of these Centennials, and that each of the other organizations will contribute $25 in celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the department. A life membership in the C. W. B. M. will be granted for every $25 given to its young people's department fund this year.

—Edward O. Tilburn, who has for sometime been in charge of our church at Butte, Mont., has entered the evangelistic field, and is open for engagements at once. Besides preaching, he directs a chorus, and furnishes books. When desired, he can give afternoon lectures on "The Church in Prophecy, or Studies in Revelation;" "Sermons in Outline," and "Familiar Objects for Children." He makes a specialty of church finance, in which he has been very successful, and uses charts and blackboards for illustrating sermons. He endeavors to make evangelism spell education. Brother Tilburn, who is willing to go anywhere, may be addressed at 119 West Galena St.

—H. James Crockett, who took the work at Bartlesville, Okla., a year ago, reports a net gain of thirty-five during the last eleven months, there having been forty-one additions. The erection of a building that is to cost $30,000 is proceeding. The basement, costing $6,500, is complete, and a work of completing the building will be resumed in the spring. Brother Crockett has an invitation to continue in the pastorate indefinitely.

—The church at Effingham, Ill., whose membership was recently largely increased by the meeting of Dr. William Thompson, has unanimously extended a call to W. B. Zimmerman, of Paris, Ill., to become the regular pastor. Educated at Drake, he is an enthusiastic and consecrated young man. He has been warmly welcomed, and at his first day's service there were five additions to the church. On the following Monday evening two who had made the confession in Dr. Thompson's meeting were baptized.

—F. E. Spooner writes of the good work at Augusta, Ohio, where he recently held his own meeting, assisted by Loren Furstenberger, his leader of music. Since Brother Spooner took the work last June there has been a great advance. The church building has been much improved, heater, baptistry and dressing rooms having been added. Most of the work was accomplished by volunteer labor. The good will of the congregation toward the pastor is seen in a very happy visit recently made to the parsonage, which was made to look like a country grocery store by the gifts of the flock.

—R. H. Sawtelle, of Indiana, Pa., has resigned as county evangelist, and is planning to enter the general evangelistic field. He has excellent credentials. J. D. Dabney, of Pittsburg, writes that his work as an evangelist and pastor has been well done. "He is an excellent man, and his preaching sets forth clearly the principles of the Reformation. His work has been the strengthening of churches and arousing the members, more than in getting great ingatherings, but he has held some meetings with quite a number of additions." Brother Sawtelle may be addressed at 867 Grant street, Indiana, Pa.

—The Daily Press of Newport News has an editorial note on the departure of D. S. Henkel, who took the work at Harrisonburg. It says that Newport News will lose a man of proved worth as a minister of the gospel and as a citizen. For three years he has been a factor for good in the city. "He is beloved by his congregation and, though his church is not a large one, he has occupied a prominent place in the city and holds the confidence and esteem of the public. Mr. Henkel's departure will be sincerely regretted, and he will carry with him to his new field of work the best wishes of all who know him."

—B. T. Wharton, of Marshall, writes: "R. M. Messick, of Salem, Oreg., pastor of the church at Marshall for three years during the eighties, is visiting his old friends in Missouri and preached for us last Sunday. He expects to remain in the state a year, and would like regular employment with one of our churches for that time. Some church ought immediately to make use of this opportunity, for he still preaches with much of his old-time vigor and earnestness. His sermons are highly spiritual, and, together with his experience, should be very helpful to the life of the church where he labors. Write him at Chillicothe, Mo.

—We have announced briefly that L. A. Betcher has resigned at Alexandria, La. He has not decided yet as to where he will go, nor has the congregation selected a successor. He has been a faithful worker for his church and for the betterment of conditions generally in the city during the past three and a half years. The local newspaper says: "He will be missed by his congregation and by hundreds of others who were not in his flock, but who wished him success in his work." We trust Brother Betcher will find a field at once, and that there will be no interregnum at Alexandria injurious to the work, which ought to receive an added impetus by our convention at New Orleans.

—Elvert E. Moorman has closed his work with the Christian Church at Danville, Ind. On the occasion of his last service the pastors of the other churches in town dismissed their congregations, bringing them to the Christian church, which proved inadequate for the crowd. A splendid spirit of fellowship and good will was manifested, and 13 responded to the invitation, making 16 accessions for the day. This gratifying result is said to have been largely contributed by the Coombs-Lucey meeting, closed a week before. Brother Coombs and his family are members of this congregation. Brother Moorman assumed charge of the Englewood Christian Church the first Sunday in December.

—H. D. Williams, who has been for the past three years at Ames, Ia., has just entered upon work in his new field as pastor at Kalamazoo, Mich. The church to which he has been ministering is one of the most important in Iowa, for there is located the College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. An effort has been made to consolidate the Baptist and Christian churches there, but for the present without success. A pastor will, doubtless, be secured soon. Kalamazoo is a very inviting field, and the church a fine missionary one. We regret to lose Brother Williams from the Iowa field, for he has been a valuable special correspondent to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but we are sure he will bring strength to Michigan and help advance our plea in that great state.

—"Why does the Centennial committee insist upon putting Prof. Willett on the program, and why does he persist in going on with the embarrassing situation that has arisen."—Thomas L. Cooksey, M. D.

We claim no authority for answering either of these questions, but as our opinion is asked, we reply that we suppose the Centennial committee feels that it has no right to demand the resignation of Prof. Willett from the program, and that Prof. Willett believes that, under existing conditions, he has no right to resign. In other words, we give both parties credit for acting conscientiously. We accord the same motive to the brethren who have criticized the committee and Prof. Willett. Can not we, then, mutually forgive each other and cease this hurtful agitation?

—Clifford A. Cole recently closed his second years' ministry with the church at Abilene, Kan. During this time there have been 119 additions. The Bible school attendance has more than trebled; the C. E. Society made one of the strongest in the county, and the church has become one of the best missionary congregations in the state. Brother Cole's salary has, for the second time, been increased, and he deserves it. The bulletin of the Abilene church has the following statement on its front page: "This church practices Christian Unity, upon the New Testament basis. No creed or test of fellowship is required or applied except that found in the Word of God. All human opinions and speculations are laid aside that the commandments of Christ may be heard and obeyed." It is a statement that ought to be emphasized just now.

—L. C. Warren, a venerable Disciple living at Veedersburg, Ind., expresses, in a personal letter to the Editor, deep solicitude over the present situation among us, and thinks it is time for all lovers of our cause and Christian liberty to "speak out," and let their influence be felt on the side of truth and right. "Tied to my cushioned chair," he writes, "unable to do anything, I feel like appealing to my brethren to fall in line, and save our cause from everlasting disgrace. Shall the work of the fathers go for naught? Must our proud standard be pulled down, and scores, like unto your humble brother, go down to the grave feeling that they have labored and sacrificed for naught?" This aged brother, now in his seventy-ninth year, feels deeply concerned that we shall not sacrifice our liberty in Christ on the altar of opinionism.

—A summary of the year's work of H. B. Robinson just closed at El Paso, Tex., shows 65 additions at regular services—7 by baptism, 20 by statement and 28 by letter, and a 35 per cent increase in the amount of missionary offerings. The pastor has been a busy man, both in the way of calling, speaking and other incidental work, which the minister has to perform, while he has published over 30,000 words in the local press. Mrs. Robinson has, among other activities, organized a young married people's class, with an enrollment of 40. They are taking up the study of the origin, contents and purpose of the books of the New Testament. The decrease of work in a number of industries in the city has made it a hard year financially for many members of the church, but we trust that a more settled condition will now prevail and that there will be no financial struggle.

—We are fortunate in having two reports of the Georgia convention, one of which appeared in our issue of last week. E. Everett Hollingworth kindly sent us some notes, and among the things not already reported, says: "Marion Stevenson, of St. Louis, conducted four Bible study hours during the convention and pledges were made by the delegates present for the organization during the coming year of fifteen adult Bible classes and six teacher training classes. Brother Stevenson was a revelation to all and his work will bear fruit. A C. W. B. M. auxiliary for the Fitzgerald church was organized with twenty members." The next convention will be held at Dublin. The state board for the coming year is as follows: President, T. E. Patterson, Griffin; vice-president, H. K. Pendleton, Atlanta; secretary, Bernard P. Smith, Atlanta; treasurer, F. J. Spratling, Atlanta; W. H. Roper, Macon; H. M. Patterson, Atlanta; John H. Wood, Winder.

—The church at Fremont, Neb., is now out of debt. There has never been a time when the current expenses have been paid from the offerings of the membership, and for several years debt has been accumulating which had reached nearly a $1,000. I. H. Fuller, the present pastor, took the matter in hand and now the way is clear for a progressive campaign for souls, and the Centennial year can be entered with brighter prospects than ever before. Sixteen new names have been added to the register since October 1. Brother Fuller says all that is needed now is a modern church building and a better pastor. No doubt the complete equipment can be improved, but the results that have been achieved in the past fourteen months would seem to indicate that the present pastor is good enough. The Bible school under the care of J. W. McClure makes good gains. There are three ladies' aids, four organized adult classes, and other well organized work.

—The preamble and resolutions passed by the ministers of St. Louis by a unanimous vote, together with our symposium, give further evidence of the overwhelming sentiment of the brotherhood in favor of peace on the only possible basis on which permanent peace can be had, namely, conformity to our own fundamental principle of loyalty to Christ and liberty in Christ. To sacrifice that principle would be to leave nothing worth celebrating.

—We call attention to the announcement made elsewhere of a new magazine to be published by the committee appointed at New Orleans convention for the organization of the men of our brotherhood for effective Christian work. The publication, which will be called "Christian Men," will be a magazine of thirty-two pages, and will begin about January 1. Fuller notice will be given when we receive a sample copy. It is likely to be a live magazine, and will, no doubt, find or make a place for itself among the publications of the brotherhood and serve a useful purpose.

—The church at Providence, R. I. which was founded a year ago, has now about 30 members, and has secured a property worth $5,000, centrally located. The cost, however, was approximately only $3,000, but owing to floating indebtedness for seats, heating apparatus, etc., there has been little preaching lately, and unless help comes at once the work will be seriously crippled. There are 350,000 people within five cent fares of this church. Several families of Disciples have moved in from the Middle states, but all are wage earners and times have been hard. Those inclined to help may address W. R. Foster, 238 Ohio avenue, who will answer any inquiries. The New England Missionary Society, we understand, will help some, but is lacking in funds. Douglas Webber, of Pawtucket, R. I., is the acting pastor, and says that a few hundred dollars invested now will enable the church to hold what it has gained in this second city in New England.

—Our St. Louis churches have enjoyed a rich spiritual feast in the visit of Dr. Royal J. Dye, who spoke Sunday morning and evening in the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, and on Monday evening at the First Christian Church, using at the latter place his stereopticon. He also addressed our ministers' meeting at their assembly room, in the building of the Christian Publishing Company, on Monday morning. In all these addresses he thrilled us with the marvelous facts of the work at Bolenge, Africa, and with the wonderful opportunities which are open to us in that dark continent. Never since the days of apostolic ministry has the power of God to cleanse, regenerate and elevate human life, been demonstrated more convincingly than in the mission at Bolenge. Dr. Dye tells his story without the slightest effort at ornament or adornment, but his facts are eloquent, indeed. His visit will prove a blessing to all our churches.

—B. H. Melton, of the Marshall Street Christian church, Richmond, Va., recently celebrated the sixth anniversary of his pastorate there, and a large congregation assembled, composed of members and many friends of this popular pastor. One of the daily papers has the following report: "The main thought of the morning sermon was, the church is not the pastor's field in which to work, but his force with which to work. The pastor's special line of work is with the young people, especially men. Some of the results of his six years' pastorate are the following: Calls, 5,125; additions to church, including especial meetings elsewhere, 420; funerals, 123; marriages, 48; present membership, 540; amount raised for all purposes this year, $4,680. The congregation is now planning to build a new church at the cost of $40,000. The church has under its direction one of the best working Bible schools in Richmond. Mrs. Melton has charge of the largest adult Bible class in the city. At the close of the service yesterday many turned to say, "God bless you."

—We announced very briefly in a recent issue the resignation of W. F. Turner at Joplin, Mo. This was accepted by the First Christian Church, and Brother Turner will probably make the change to Peoria, Ill, where he has accepted the call of the Central Church, early in the new year. On January 1 he will complete ten years of service in his present pastorate—years that have been somewhat eventful. When he first went to Joplin we had just over 300 members in that city, who met in an old frame house, with a long standing debt. The first year of Brother Turner's work the debt was paid. The next year a movement was started to erect a modern building, and in December, 1901, L. L. Carpenter dedicated it, the total cost of the property being about $25,000, though under present valuation it is worth $40,000. It was in 1903 that was held here one of the first of our great evangelistic meetings, when 675 were recorded under the leadership of Evangelists Harlow and Ridenour. The same year the South Joplin church was organized and housed under the leadership of J. W. Baker, who had served as Sunday-school superintendent, and later was persuaded to become minister of the new church. That congregation to-day has nearly 600 members, and G. L. Peters is its beloved minister. In 1904 the debt on the First Church was paid in a memorable financial campaign, which lasted thirty-three weeks before the mortgage was burned. A year later the church became a living link in both home and foreign missions. In 1906 a mission was started at Villa Heights, which grew into a third church, a house being erected and dedicated free of debt under the leadership of Brother Baker, who was then serving as county evangelist. In February, 1907, the First Church called J. W. Famuliner as assistant minister, to give half his time to the new Villa Heights church, but in January of this year he was called by this for all his time, and has just concluded a fine meeting with 21 additions, which brings the membership almost up to 100. The First Church has also just concluded a meeting with 57 additions, the evangelists being Harlow, Kuhn and Miss Hite. If fourteen more people unite with the First Church during this month, it will bring the number of additions there, in this decade of service, up to just 2,000. But several hundred besides this have been received at meetings held by Brother Turner at other places. The present membership is between 800 and 1,000. Brother Turner finds it hard, indeed, to break away from a field where he has given so much of his energy, thought and tears. The demand on his physical strength has been great.

Who Are Our Own?

The famous declaration of Paul that "he who does not provide for his own, especially those of his own household, is worse than an unbeliever," meets with increasing acceptance every day. On this principle as citizens we provide for the old soldiers; as stockholders we are giving pensions to our employees on the railroads and in the mines and factories; as Christians we must be no less thoughtful of aged and disabled ministers of the gospel.

Everybody recognizes this obligation. Everybody will agree that the minister, instead of being the last man to receive a pension, should be the first. But it is notoriously true that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business." He is not my preacher and he is not your preacher, and he is not our neighbor's preacher, especially, but he is our preacher. And while we have been mortally slow in funding our fellowship, he has been suffering.

So we have come to the last year of the century which has been made a glorious era in the restoration of apostolic Christianity, principally through the self-sacrificing labors of God's ministers. We dare not think of coming up to the Centennial of rejoicing and the inauguration of the greater century that is to follow without everyone joining in a splendid Centennial offering for Ministerial Relief. The only members exempt from this fellowship of love and remembrance are those who made the good confession without a preacher's appeal, were raised out of the waters of baptism without a preacher's hand, and have been strengthened and cheered in the Christian life without a preacher's help. Let all the rest of us join gladly in the offering on the appointed Lord's day this last month of 1908.

W. R. Warren, Centennial Sec.

Another Overture for Peace.

The St. Louis Christian Ministers' Association, at its regular meeting, December 14, passed the following resolutions: (There were present thirteen resident preachers and several visitors; the resolutions were unanimously adopted.)

Deeply regretting the strife that has arisen over the proposed Centennial program, while not at this time either defending or assailing the opinions, theories or teachings of any one personally concerned in the controversy, we respectfully submit the following resolutions:

1. That we believe the program committee to be a representative one and that in their selection of speakers its members acted as they deemed wise and right, and that the committee alone, and not our missionary societies, should be held responsible for its work.

2. That we entreat our brethren everywhere to withhold further criticism on the Centennial program (as yet imperfectly published), and we particularly protest against allowing any difference of opinion to be made a reason for withholding support from our missionary organizations.

3. That loyalty to our fathers and our plea demands that our brethren—editors and correspondents alike—refrain from all further acrimonious discussion of these matters. Thus, with the exercise of forbearance and charity, which are among the first principles of our holy religion, we shall preserve unsoiled the platform on which the apostles long ago and our fathers of more recent times fought their splendid battles for truth and Christian unity, that so the Pittsburg convention of 1909 may be to our great and beloved brotherhood the glorious crowning of the past eventful century.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, the Christian Standard and the Christian Century, with request for publication.

L. W. McCreary, President.
G. E. Ireland, Secretary.

A Correction.

Some of the friends of the Foreign Society are confused as to the Centennial program at Pittsburg, October, 1909. We will be pardoned for two corrections:

The Foreign Society has nothing to do with the Centennial program. It has made no suggestions whatever as to the speakers. Eleven members of the twelve on the Executive Committee of the Foreign Society did not even know who had been asked to speak until the subject was mentioned in the papers.

2. The program of the Foreign Society is one thing, and the Centennial program is an entirely different thing. Some seem to think they are one and the same. This is a mistake. The Foreign Society is responsible only for its own program. The Centennial Committee, composed of sixteen members, arranged the Centennial program. One member of the Executive Committee of the Foreign Society happens to be on the Centennial Committee, but he was not appointed to represent the Foreign Society, but to serve the brotherhood as he may be able.

These are the exact facts.—The Missionary Intelligencer.

Dr. Thompson at Mt. Carmel, Ill.

On November 8 we began a meeting, with Dr. William Thompson doing the preaching. Early in this year we closed a meeting with Charles Reign Scoville, in which over five hundred expressed the determination for a better life. Following so closely upon that wonderful meeting, it was hardly to be expected that there should be an overwhelming number of additions, but rather it was the desire that the services should partake more largely of the nature of a rally of the forces of the church to the end that the building project might be opened up with the coming spring. The results are not in the least disappointing. From first to last 47 responded to the invitations, 26 for baptism, 14 made statement, one reclaimed and six came by letter. The church was helped and uplifted, the presentation being such that many who seemingly were losing their grip on the better things heeded the warnings and are earnestly renewing their spiritual activities. Many from other churches came regularly and went away saying, "I never heard it like that before, and I am sure there is something wrong with me." Seed was sown that we feel sure will bring fruitage in days to come. Our great and almost fatal handicap was that our house was too small; many had to be turned from the door night after night. Really it was heart-breaking to have the people coming and no room to house them long enough to have the gospel preached to them. Of the preacher we have no words of fulsome eulogy. He is surely a coming man. His methods are unique and different in some respects from those of our evangelists. But there is not a sign of departure from the plain paths of scripture. He is an orator of rare power, with many flashes of thrilling eloquence. But, best of all, he is in desperate and deadly earnest, believing the gospel to be "the power of God unto salvation," and that he has no other business than to preach it with all the power of his being. We here are predicting a great future for his ministry, and shall pray for his success wherever he goes.

Dr. Thompson has located his family here in Mt. Carmel, and those wishing his services will reach him by so addressing him. We trust that he may be kept busy, for he is too able a man to be allowed to be without work. J. W. Kilborn, minister.

Ohio Letter.

Preachers are moving in Ohio even if it is cold weather. They move in season and out of season—quite a good many out of season. C. R. Oakley, recently of Wauseon, has moved to Mansfield to assume the responsibilities of that flock. He has the good wishes and prayers of the brethren.——C. B. Reynolds has moved from New Philadelphia to Alliance and will minister in Word to that collection of saints. He, too, has the good will and prayers of the brethren.——J. B. Smith has come from Pennsylvania to look after the welfare of the disciples who are called Christians only at Jackson. We extend to him a most cordial Buckeye welcome.——A. M. Hurd has been unanimously invited by the congregations at East Liberty and Middleburg to preach for them. He has accepted the invitation and has begun his duties.——Adolphus Moffett has come back home from Evansville, Ind., and taken the work at Wauseon. That is just right. He knows that no state is like Ohio.——O. G. Blackwell has resigned at New Holland, but whereunto we are not now informed.——C. J. Tanner is helping the Hiram church in a ten days revival.——Brother Tanner will be a very happy fit for this delicate task. There has been thorough preparation and a good meeting will no doubt result. C. S. Brooks, of New Castle, Pa., has just closed with the Second church at Warren. It was a good meeting with quite a good ingathering.——L. I. Mercer is holding his own meeting at Springfield, assisted by the Kendalls in song and personal work.——Gypsy Smith has been in Cleveland two weeks. His work is pronounced the best ever done in the city. He is a unique character. He has no eccentricities. He is just a plain, quiet, forcible preacher of the eternal gospel of Christ. He is not a manipulator. He is a man of great faith. Most of our evangelists could sit at his feet with great profit.——I. J. Cahill recently gave his lecture, "The Gentleman from Ohio" before the Men's Club of the church at Uhrichsville. C. A. Freer.

Florida State Convention

It was held at Tampa. It was up to the high watermark, and one of our best. Harmony prevailed throughout. We had J. J. Haley, representing the F. C. M. S., Ministerial Relief, and the Centennial Committee; J. A. Denton, representing the A. C. M. S.; J. H. Mohorter and W. B. Shaw, representing the N. B. A.; and Mrs. M. E. Harlan, Cor. Sec. of the C. W. B. M. The convention opened Nov. 12, with C. W. B. M. day, one of the very best days of the convention. One of its glad features was the presence of Miss Rebel Withers, for fourteen years President of the State C. W. B. M., but for the last two years unable to serve on account of failing health. While not yet able to take up very active work, she is much improved and was able to be in the convention. Sister Armstrong, of the Jacksonville Church, was made president when Miss Withers was obliged to rest, and she made an excellent State President till she left the state a few months ago. Mrs. R. T. Walker, vice-president, presided over the convention most acceptably. Mrs. F. J. London was elected president for the ensuing year. She and her husband have recently returned to the state after an absence of three or four years. They are both well known to the Florida churches as strong C. W. B. M. workers. They live at DeLand. During the convention the C. W. B. M. obtained fourteen life memberships. This means $350 for their treasury.

Friday was given to our general societies. All their representatives gave us able and inspiring addresses. The N. B. A. took pledges for an Old People's Home, to be located in the South. The pledges and money received amounted to $157.50. This is a most worthy cause that appeals to every tender heart. We rejoice in the liberal response it met with in our little Florida convention. But the stronger states do not permit these appeals for money in their State Conventions. If permitted for one worthy cause, why not for another equally deserving? Where is the stopping place? Will not many shun our conventions if thus beseiged when they go? This is a question of the greatest good to the greatest number, all things considered.

Saturday was State Day. Encouraging reports were made by the state officers, evangelists and churches. The tide is slowly rising in Florida, which is admittedly a difficult field. Three new organizations were effected during the year, and nearly all the churches reported progress.

Three of the other churches of Tampa opened their pulpits to us on the Lord's day, one Methodist, one Presbyterian, and one Congregational. These were occupied by our ministers morning and evening. Brother Mohorter preached morning and evening at the Christian Church. He is the right man in the right place.

Our convention over, we turn our faces to the last year of the first century of our movement. We confidently expect it to be the best in the history of our state. Our convention meets next year at DeLand, Nov. 8-10. One item on the program will be, "Echoes from the Pittsburg Convention, or the Centennial Convention." What a year this is to be to the disciples! Brother, sister, shall not Florida be equal to the great occasion?

T. A. Cox, Cor. Sec.

North Carolina Convention

The sixty-fourth annual convention of New Bern has gone into history. Three hundred and twelve visitors enjoyed the hospitality of Kinston for four days, Nov. 17-20. The church house was crowded at all sessions, and in the evenings scores were turned away. According to custom, the first day was devoted to the interests of the C. W. B. M. The women are doing a wonderful work in the Old North State. Every auxiliary was represented. Addresses were delivered by Mrs. R. F. Hill, Mrs. T. Midyette, Mrs. H. T. King, Miss Kathleen Salmon and others. The reports from the various unions and the Cor. Secretary showed a marked growth in attendance and receipts. Mrs. J. J. Taylor gave a fine report of the children's department. A symposium on "Our Forms of Work" was participated in by Mrs. G. W. Coan, Mrs. J. J. Rogers, Mrs. Ida Ellis, Miss Flora Petree, Mrs. J. A. Erwin, Mrs. J. C Barrington, and Mrs. T. L. Willingham. This report would be incomplete without mention of Miss Mary Orvis, of Richmond, Va., who represented the work of the national Board. It was the writer's good fortune to travel across the continent on "The Christian-Evangelist Special" in company with Miss Orvis, J. A. Hopkins, and a host of the Lord's chosen. Miss Orvis has served Virginia and North Carolina faithfully, and now she goes to Monterey, Mexico, to labor with our friend Mrs. J. H. Fuller and the other missionaries in that important city. The "Young People's Hour" was beautifully presided over by Miss Malissa May.

The last three days of the convention were devoted to the general interest of the state. Each union was heard from, each mission church of the state Board reported. Atlantic Christian College and Industrial Christian College were represented by their presidents, J. C. Caldwell and J. W. Tyndal, the Sunday-school interests were given prominence, and such men as J. J. Haley and J. H. Mohorter told of our benevolences and mission enterprises outside of this state. No worthy interest that sought admission on the program was refused. In some respects the North Carolina organization is exceptional. Not only is there a manifest willingness to encourage world-wide evangelization, but with a liberality hard to excel, money is contributed to carry on the work. After a rousing speech by Pres. J. C. Caldwell, of Atlantic Christian College at Wilson, about $1,100 was quickly raised as a help in cancelling the debt on this growing institution. Eighteen as bright young men as the Lord ever made attended the convention in company with their president, J. C. Caldwell. The college session was glorious. Addresses were delivered by five of these brainy students: C. B. Mashburn, C. F. Outlaw, C. M. Morton, Hayes Farish and A. J. Manning. The college quartet, directed by Prof. J. D. Bowles, sang several numbers. Enthusiasm ran high. College yells and college songs told the natives that the college spirit was in the air.

In addition to the brethren of note and ability whose names have been mentioned, must be added those of P. B. Hall, the courteous pastor of Kinston Church, who has just left the state to teach in the college in Lynchburg, Va.; H. C. Bowen, the new pastor in Belhaven, a native North Carolinian, who returns to his own; D. H. Petree, who preached the convention sermon with clearness and beauty; D. W. Arnold, whose rousing address on "The Missing Link—Shall We Find It?" will long be remembered; J. A. Erwin, the whirlwind of Wilmington, who uprooted everything, even the money in our pocketbooks. He raised a large sum for state missions. J. B. Robertson, Gen. Sec. of the N. C. S. S. Ass'n.; and Dr. R. H. Jones, teacher of the first teacher-training class to graduate in North Carolina; S. P. Spiegel, of Alabama, a strong man, who enters this state as pastor of the Wilson church; and L. P. Springle, who spoke on "Financing the State Work."

The C. W. B. M. officers for the ensuing year are: Pres., Mrs. R. F. Hill; Vice-Pres., Mrs. J. W. Grainger; Cor. Sec., Miss Etta Nunn; Treas., Mrs. Martha Moseley; Supt. Y. P. D., Mrs. J. F. Taylor; Advisory Board, Mrs. N. J. Rouse, Mrs. Sarah Askew, Mrs. Julia M. Parrott, Mrs. T. L. Willingham, Mrs. R. L. Crisp. The following were chosen to serve the churches as a state board for the coming year: Pres., J. W. Hines; Vice-Pres., J. H. S. Hodges; Cor. Sec., J. R. Roundtree; Treas., Geo. Hackney; Rec. Sec., C M. Morton.

The state work is about to suffer a great loss in the removal of W. G. Walker, an energetic, persistent, politic, sweet-spirited and consecrated Cor. Sec. as it is possible to find. He has done a wonderful work. The burden of the state has been upon his heart, and this convention could not be recorded as the "best yet" had it not been for his consecration and unceasing toil. The church that secures his services will be fortunate indeed.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

The Twin Falls Meeting.

As a result of the efforts of evangelist Amos K. Clarke the gospel has been firmly planted in one of the most important new towns in the northwest. Twin Falls, Idaho, is a city of 4,500, a county seat and the commercial center of one of the largest irrigation projects in the world. New lands are opening for settlement and people are coming in very rapidly. There is but one other organized Church of Christ in the southeast third of the state. The Church of Christ was among the most active churches in town; none of them were strong. Our workers were few, our building was small, and the tabernacle where the meetings were held was not centrally located and difficult to heat. Furthermore, other churches and ourselves had held meetings in this new city with no results. Of the 132 persons who responded to the invitations, 83 made the good confession, many being men past the prime of life. The cause of the great ingathering was the strong preaching of Brother Clarke. One man had not attended church for twenty years, and said his case was hopeless. He confessed Christ at the first service he attended. Another said he had "never heard the gospel preached like that" and confessed Christ, with several of his household, after hearing two sermons. One little girl did not wish to wait for the invitation, but stood up and confessed Christ before the sermon commenced. We felt that the revival was only beginning when it closed.

I can not speak too highly of the singing of the evangelist's daughter, Miss Susie Clarke, and Miss Ruth Dollinger, both cultured singers, who sang songs of deep appeal, night after night, and led the chorus in great praise services. Mrs. Clarke, besides her assistance with the music, with her brother, Dr. Stevens, and Miss Dollinger, won many souls to Christ by personal efforts. The Clarke family and their helpers endeared themselves to all those who attended the meetings.

Ray M. Beauchamp, minister.

Haddock at Pecos, Texas.

On November 25 we closed the greatest meeting in the history of the Pecos church. For years a few faithful ones have been doing what they could to keep the work moving. Some of these were present to rejoice in the reaping; some have gone to other fields, and some to "fairer fields on high." O. P. Spiegel led us in our meeting last year, when 17 were added, from all sources, bringing our membership to about 52. January 1, 1908, we numbered 55, and our watchword was "Double our membership by 1909."

We had heard that one J. L. Haddock was not afraid of anything, and that he had succeeded under the most unfavorable circumstances. He agreed to assist us, and on October 15 our campaign began, with Talmage Stanley leading the song service. We had kept the meeting before the people of the town for four months, and I think we had fully 400 present at the opening service. Our tent was well located, and the people continued to come. Brother Haddock took two weeks to lay his foundation, and did not press the invitation until that work was done. The results were as follows: There were 72 additions—9 by letter or statement, 6 reclaimed, 9, who had been baptized, from other bodies and 48 baptisms. The last night of the meeting $5,800 was pledged for a new building. We expect to have it completed in August, 1909, when Brother Haddock will again lead us on to victory. The mark set in our watchword has been reached and passed, and we yet have a month remaining in which to reach others.

If you want a man who can preach the whole truth, under any circumstances and in a spirit of kindliness and love, send for Brother Haddock. Let him stay his own time, and he will move the community.

The interest increased to the close, and there were 31 added during the last three days. One thing more must be told: One of the converts said that in days past he had spent a great deal of his time in cussing the "Campbellites" and the third party. "But now," he says, "I have no more to say about the third party, for if I knew what they stand for I might be one of its supporters." Pray for us, that we may be able to care for the newborn babes in Christ. Homer L. Magee, minister.

Pecos, Tex.

Notes From Fulton, Mo.

The Fulton church has enjoyed, in some respects, the best meeting in its history. It lasted twenty-three days and resulted in 79 additions—51 by confession and baptism and four from other religious bodies. W. F. Turner, pastor of the First Christian Church, Joplin, Mo., did the preaching, and A. O. Kuhn, of New York City, chorus director for Evangelist W. E. Harlow, had charge of the music. Two months of preparation had been had in the way of agitation and meditation, during which time there were eighteen additions to the church, six of which were by conversion.

Brother Turner's preaching was "in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power," simple, sane, sound, scriptural, soul-moving, sin-convicting, utterly devoid of sensationalism, yet possessed of a quiet but intense earnestness of great spiritual potency. In addition to the numerical increase, the church and community has had a rare spiritual uplift.

Brother Kuhn has not long since come to us from the Presbyterian church. He is an accomplished musician, a consecrated young preacher, and the church has never had a more able song leader and soloist. A large chorus of seventy voices ably seconded his labors. On November 29 he was ordained to the ministry by J. B. Jones, W. F. Turner and the writer, and the elders and deacons were also set apart, according to scriptural authority, for ordination to their respective offices. Many said that this was one of the most beautiful and impressive services they had ever witnessed. If those churches in which the ordination of the diaconate and eldership has fallen into desuetude could have witnessed this service, the scriptural precedent would again be practiced.

This church, on September 6, also ordained Clarence F. McCall to the ministry. He and his wife, while laboring as missionaries in Japan, hold membership in this church. They are supported by the church at Bethany, Mo. This church has for the past two years supported Miss Rose Johnson, of Akita, Japan.

I held a short meeting recently at the Central church, located four miles west of Fulton. There were eleven additions, nine by conversion.

William Woods College enters upon the year with the promise of this being the best in the history of the institution. There are 200 students enrolled, 135 of whom are boarders. It is a Christian school, not only in name but in fact. This is evidenced not only by the highest Christian ideals being constantly upheld by the president and faculty, but in the fact that of the 135 students boarding in the college all are members of some church with the exception of thirteen. The good work done by President Jones for this school is beyond calculation. He has brought it from the verge of bankruptcy, struggling with overwhelming debts, almost lost to the brotherhood, to a high state of prosperity, free from debt, second to none of our colleges for young women. A great trinity has been at work for the institution—its president, its greatest benefactor, Dr. W. S. Woods, of Kansas City, whose name it wears, and the unseen Helper, who has ever been recognized as sufficient for all its needs. To these must be added a very superior faculty, a large number of benefactors and a great host of friends. The most cordial and co-operative relationship exists between the church and the college. W. A. Fite.

Beaver Falls Meeting.

On October 25 we dedicated our new building and began a meeting on November 8, with John G. Slayter, of Pittsburg. The services lasted twenty days and there were sixty three accessions, the pastor having seven additional the following Lord's day. Beaver Falls is the seat of the only Reformed Presbyterian college in this country and the city is permeated with Calvinistic doctrine. Until recently the Christian Church was but a small body and their building an inadequate one. Upon the completion of the new building, the pastor requested the privilege of choosing an evangelist and of advertising the meeting. The result is that the Christian Church is not the little, out-of-the-way affair that it has been hitherto, but is first in the community, in every respect.

Brother Slayter's manly, scholarly and sincere sermons won the hearts of all the people who came out to hear him, and the common verdict is that his equal was never heard in this city. The church now has a membership of over four hundred, most of whom are active. The present pastor has had 179 accessions since locating with the congregation in January, 1906, and we have also completed a new building worth to-day about $30,000. J. W. Darby, pastor.

Beaver Falls, Pa.

Meeting at Salina, Kan.

Wilhite and Gates closed a meeting for us November 29 that may be of more than local interest. The meeting lasted twenty-six preaching days. One hundred and sixty-two were added to the church; 94 of these were young men and women. There were very few children among the converts, owing to the fact that the Sunday school is closely gleaned all the year round. The meeting, which was a man-to-man struggle from the beginning, began in the midst of a very hot local campaign and ended in a week of bad weather. This is considered a difficult field for revival work.

The evangelist was engaged a year ahead. The meeting was kept before the people throughout the year. Every sermon for six weeks before the revival bore directly on the meeting. Cottage prayer-meetings were held; hand bills were distributed in every home. "V" shaped sign boards were placed on the principal street corners. Window hangers were put in the business and office and home windows. A tabernacle, 55x120 feet, was built, $450 being raised for this purpose. A string of electric lights a block long, and another running across the street in front of the tabernacle, were installed. A corps of twenty-five men, under the leadership of Howard C. Rash, did the ushering and a similar number of women, under the leadership of Mrs. D. L. Batchelor, were organized for personal work. Each man and woman had a "station" indicated by a number. These two organizations were very effective. Several thousand tracts from our National Board of Evangelization were used. Probably twenty-five hundred people were within hearing distance on Sunday nights and hundreds were turned away.

Wilhite and Gates are Christian gentlemen. They left no bitterness behind them. They abused no one. They preached and sang Christ. Wilhite's appeals are exceptionally strong. Gates' solos were the most effective ever heard here. His leadership of the chorus of a hundred voices was fine.

This is the largest single meeting ever held in Salina. The total cost will run up to near a thousand dollars. Something over $400 of this went to the evangelists as a free-will offering.

David H. Shields, minister.

Fund to Cover Loss at the Southern Christian Institute.

Gifts received to Nov. 20 toward covering the loss at the Southern Christian Institute, caused by the burning of the girls' dormitory there, amounted to $466.65. Then we have pledges to the amount of about one hundred and fifty dollars which would make only a little over six hundred dollars. We need $3,000 to tide us over this time of loss.

I heartily thank those who have so promptly responded, but the amount so far received is only about one-sixth of what I actually need to make good the loss at our Southern Christian Institute. Will not our brethren see to it that I have this $3,000? This institution has never been adequately equipped for its great work. I ask not for anything fancy for it, but for just a plain working equipment for the great work it has before it. This school has been a part of the work of the Church of Christ for twenty-five years. We have now come to a time which we might almost call the "parting of the ways," must either go forward and properly equip it for its great work or lose what cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. We have come to a time when this work calls for development; for a broader basis for work.

Will not our brotherhood heed this request for $3,000 now that we may recover the loss made by fire and lay the basis for a better equipped work at this school whose work is nothing less than the part in the redemption of a race and the solving of one of the grave problems of this land of ours?

Send personal gifts, and let Churches send offerings that this Institute may go forward in its righteous work.

Tabernacle at Salina for Wilhite and Gates.

Notes from Oklahoma.

I have been in the old Creek country for two months or more. It has been very rainy most of the time. In fact, it has seemed to me that central Illinois has been transported to these parts.

I preached two weeks at West Tulsa, with seven added. In a week, at Haskell, there were no visible results. I also preached almost a week at Boynton, where we have no organization and but few members, most of whom are women. There are but four or five men who have ever been identified with the church, and some of them are akin to the Laodiceans. Brother Sterling, of Missouri, expected to hold a meeting there soon. If he does not do so, I may return thither.

There is work needed in the rural districts here, but there are few school houses, as yet. However, there are several building and others contemplated.

Oklahoma Christian University News.

Last year Oklahoma Christian University won the silver cup from the Congregationalist College at Kingfisher. This year the Epworth University, of Oklahoma City, came up with three lawyers, expecting to carry the cup home with them; but our preacher boys outtalked the lawyers. O. C. U. is the only college in the state that has succeeded in winning this cup twice.

Enthusiasm ran high. The occasion reminded one of a great convention. Enid learned, better than ever before, what a great school she has in her midst.

"A Double-Linkum."

This is a word coined by E. J. Fenstermacher, Bowling Green, to tell the story of the big advance made by that church in the support of Kentucky Missions. They have provided enough money to insure the putting of two men to work in the 20th District.

That is a fine record for the Bowling Green Church and their preacher.

Cadiz has joined the living-link class. Mayfield has agreed to do likewise and of course Owensboro will not fall behind her usual record, with Dr. M. Gano Buckner at the helm and the splendid foundation left by Pres. R. H. Crossfield. Hopkinsville may be counted on in the same class without fail and that makes six of that class in Western Kentucky. Central Kentucky must hold all we have in that line and ought to make some advance. Richmond has signified her purpose to do this. That makes ten in upper Kentucky in this class if all the last year "living link" churches stay in line. Sixteen altogether and we ought to reach twenty.

Do not let January, 1909, find you without having provided for the needs of Kentucky missions H. W. Elliott, Sec.

Hoosier Happenings.

Henry W. Swan is doing a fine work at Gas City, and has been called for the third year. His church recently gave a reception in his honor. He uses the baptistry every Sunday and the house is crowded every evening service.——A. L. Martin, of La Fountain, has been busy building up a large Bible school and receiving people into the church. There have been about two hundred additions to the church in the last two years. Martin was reared where he preaches, and is a prophet with honor in his own country and with his own people.—Brother Baker has resigned at Converse and moved up in Michigan. He was popular with the people and did a good work. His wife was a fine Bible school worker and she built up a large school in a small town. ——Scoville and his helpers are at Anderson in another great meeting. It looks as though the record he made before will be broken. The large church is crowded nightly, and more room is needed to accommodate those who desire to hear. The church will not seat the present membership if all were to go at one service. If many more are gathered in the church will have to swarm or build.——The Swayzee brethren have built a new house and need a good man to lead them on to larger things. The house is modern and much better than you usually see in that size town.——We have torn down our old building and excavated for a new one. We have put in the foundation, and when the spring opens we expect to build the church home we have needed so long. We have secured the large auditorium in the city library and have a nice church home while we are building. We still have large audiences in our new quarters, and we hope to win many of them to the church.——I was elected chaplain of the T. P. A., and was selected to preach the union Thanksgiving sermon in the M. E. church. Those who have been pastors or held meetings here will understand what this means. I believe we are to have a great church soon like the one in Anderson. When we finish our new house we expect a great harvest. We are trying to cultivate the crop and get everything ready.——I have just closed a short meeting for George W. Winfrey and the church at Summitville. It resulted in forty additions to the church. We had fine audiences and at times had to turn people away. Brother Winfrey and his cultured wife are great leaders, and they have an ideal church. Brother Winfrey could get larger fields, but his people are determined to keep him. R. B. Givens is a member of the church and helped greatly in the meeting. Every one treated me royally, and I greatly enjoyed the visit. God bless one and all.

Marion, Ind. J. Boyd Jones.

Pomona Meeting.

We have just closed the greatest meeting ever held in Pomona, Calif. I wrote to Herbert Yeuell just before the New Orleans convention, and it so happened that he had an open date for a short meeting immediately following the convention. This gave us a very little time in which to prepare, but we set to work at once, and by the time the meeting began we had things in readiness. Skillful and persistent advertising filled the church at the first service, Thursday night, and on Sunday we were crowded to overflowing. We at once secured a tent seating 1,000, which was frequently taxed to its utmost capacity. The large audiences at all the services were both a surprise and a delight to our people. They were not expecting it. There were 800 men at the Sunday afternoon men's meeting, and over 900 women at the women's meeting. The large chorus choir, under the efficient direction of our own Brother G. H. Waters, was an inspiring feature of the meeting. The amount of personal work done was a revelation to us all. We never dreamed that we could do it. It demonstrated two things—that personal work from house to house and during the progress of the invitation, counts, and that our people can do it just as well as other people. I am persuaded that we should do more personal work in all revival meetings. A complete religious census of the city had been taken prior to the meeting, and this proved of great service to us in our personal work. During the meeting there were about 180 responses to the invitation. Some of these will unite with other churches in the city, and some with no church; about 140 will be added to our membership. Quite a number of heads of families are among the number; but what pleased us most was to see so many young people and boys and girls from the Sunday-school coming into the church. Brother Yeuell is truly a great leader. He thoroughly understands his work, and he pushes it with inexhaustible energy and persistence. Sister Yeuell accompanied Brother Yeuell to the coast, and she proved a worthy helpmeet to her husband in his great work. We feel stronger, and the church will go forward to still larger things. M. D. Clubb.

DEDICATIONS.

Arapahoe, Nebraska.

The dedication of the new Church of Christ here was a great success and an uplift to our cause for miles around. Weather conditions were very unfavorable, there being a continual rain. Despite the fact, the services were held, and L. L. Carpenter was in charge, and led us to a great victory. We needed $3.700 to complete the payment on the $11,000 property. Of this $2,700 was raised at the morning service, and at a further call the amount was increased until it was about $3,000.—J. A. Parker.

Checotah, Oklahoma.

The church at Checotah has been rededicated after a complete overhauling and installation of new pews. The sermon was by Evangelist John A. Tabor, who was holding a meeting at this place. The amount necessary to cover the indebtedness was secured with some dollars to spare. The other Protestant churches did not hold their morning services in order to permit the members to attend the Christian Church.

The meeting has been well attended; the interest increasing. The local paper states that there were 12 additions at the time of the report and that the evangelist preached some strong sermons. Mrs. A. G. Albright, of Illinois, was in charge of the music.

ALLEN.

Miss Jennie Maddox was born in Oldham county, Kentucky, January 1, 1837, and died at Bowling Green November 2, 1908. In 1858 she was married to Frank G. Allen, who was a member of the Methodist Church, but under her kindly yet positive teachings, aided by her father, a strong advocate of the doctrine of the Christian Church, Mr. Allen saw in a new light New Testament baptism and the observance of the Lord's supper. After uniting with the Christian Church he moved to Eminence, where, under President W. S. Giltner, he finished his education in the scriptures and New Testament Greek, forming the habit of careful study, which ere long placed him among the leading preachers, writers and debaters of his day. Brother Allen died in 1887 and was buried in the Moffett Cemetery, near Mount Byrd Church and "Cottage Home," the scene of his last labors, and where on November 5 his beloved companion was laid to rest beside him. Of their children two daughters and one son survive, Mrs. E. J. Fenstermacher, of Bowling Green, Ky.; Mrs. Lulu A. Voiers, of Jeffersonville, Ind., and Frank Waller Allen, the successful pastor of the Christian Church at Paris, Mo. The deceased are Minnie, dying in infancy; Mrs. Allie F. Giltner, in 1896, and Mrs. A. W. Kokendoffer, in 1905. Mrs. Allen was devoutly interested in the affairs of the church and rejoiced in its triumphs and the ministries of those of her own household. She was in profound sympathy with the progress of the church in organized missions and in its modern equipment for service, and when reminded that her worthy husband was very conservative, she replied that had he lived until now he too would have interpreted the mission of the church, as found in the scriptures, sufficiently enlarged and equipped to meet the demands of the times, for this was the mind of the apostles. Her life was rich in faith and though comparatively unknown to the brotherhood, yet a voice unheard afar, an influence unfelt by many, has and will yet live in valiant ministries for the Christ and the church. She was cared for in her declining days by Mrs. Fenstermacher, where she made her home since the sale of "Cottage Home," after she was no longer able for domestic duties. And now she rests from her labors and has found the eternal inheritance and the blessed reunion for which so many of us watch and wait. A. W. K.

BROWN.

The Central Church, of Denver, Colo., is bereaved in the death of our beloved brother, Dr. Leander S. Brown. For twenty-eight years a consecrated minister of the gospel, when that was no longer practicable he took a course in osteopathy and became a successful practitioner in Denver. Born in Wayne county, Ohio, July 5, 1840, he was brought up in Washington county, Pennsylvania, became a student in Pleasant Valley Academy under L. P. Streator, taught several years in Illinois, entered Bethany College and graduated from that renowned mother of preachers in 1867, and entered immediately on his chosen work of preaching Christ. His work as a minister extended through the states of Illinois, Iowa, Pennsylvania and Colorado. In 1879 he graduated in the New York Homeopathic college, but continued preaching for seventeen years afterward. He was nine years pastor of the Christian church in Plymouth, Pa., and his successful work there is gratefully remembered. It was through old Pennsylvania friends that he was induced to come to Colorado in 1893 and take up the new work in Fort Collins. The church there is a monument to his faithfulness. Brother Brown was a member of the Central when the present pastor came back to this church in 1903. He had been elder and one of the most faithful members. Pastors sometimes complain of the ex-preachers in the membership: there is no complaint of that kind in this case for we had no more sympathetic friend and helper than Dr. Brown and his equally faithful wife. He had lived long enough and worked long enough to be entitled to claim some exemption from arduous church duties. No one in the church was more regular in attendance at Bible school, at morning and evening service, at the mid-week services. He and his wife were there rain or shine until enfeebled health made it impossible for him. He was brave and independent. It was easy for him to stand alone if need be in defense of the truth. His convictions were firm and fixed. He was naturally conservative. I did not expect him to sympathize with my more liberal interpretation of the gospel, but his honesty and sincere desire for the truth were stronger than his conservatism and made him patient and hospitable in the consideration of new ideas. Having earned his confidence I had no truer or more appreciative friend. We miss him. Such men are indeed pillars in the church. All the way along through life his influence was good in the church, in the home, in the community. He was "salt of the earth." Children in the faith all over the land rise up and call him blessed.

COCHRAN.

Percy Bayard Cochran, son of M. M. Cochran, Esq., was born October 10, 1879, at Uniontown, Pa., and died November 14, 1908, aged 29 years, 1 month and 4 days. He was buried November 17 in Oak Grove Cemetery, Uniontown, Pa. The deceased was taken ill at Star Junction, Pa., where he was aiding his father in fighting a fire in a mine of the Washington Coal and Coke Company. On Saturday, October 31, he was removed in the private car of Superintendent Yohe, of the P. & L. E. railway, to the West Pennsylvania Hospital, Pittsburg, where the disease was diagnosed as appendicitis. After ten days of treatment by skilled physicians in an effort to get the patient in the best possible physical condition, an operation was performed by Dr. McFarland. For two days following the operation the patient seemed to be doing well; then a change occurred and after a rapid decline the end came on the following Saturday at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. Accompanied by the father and Mrs. Cochran the body was brought home to Uniontown, Pa., Saturday evening and conveyed to the family residence. The sad news brought from far and near tender expressions of sympathy for the bereaved and of sincere regard for the departed. Rich floral tributes from mourning friends literally banked the room at home where the body lay in state Sunday afternoon, all day Monday and Tuesday morning. The funeral services were conducted at the Central Christian Church, of which the deceased was a faithful member, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, by the pastor, J. Walter Carpenter, assisted by Dr. T. E. Cramblet, president of Bethany College, and Rev. Charles M. Watson, pastor of the Christian Church, Connellsville, Pa. A sympathetic audience of friends, more than 600 in number, attended the services. The Fayette County Bar Association, of which the departed was an honored member, attended in a body. Numerous friends from a distance were also present. A quartette, composed of Judge J. O. Van Swearingen, J. A. Glenn and Misses Elizabeth Brooke and Sue Pyle furnished the music. Pastor Carpenter spoke from the text, "And in the garden was a new tomb." President Cramblet told of his personal acquaintance with the deceased, relating his work as teacher of English during a term at Bethany College, and the rare literary attainments of the young man, who was a graduate both of Bethany College and Yale University. After graduation he studied law and was admitted to the bar of Fayette county, Pennsylvania, where for years he practiced his profession with credit both to himself and the association to which he belonged. The deceased's crowning life work, however, was in the realm of literature. Within the past fourteen months he again traveled abroad, covering England and much of the continent. While in London he took post-graduate courses in English literature and was admitted to membership in a very select circle of English authors. The pall bearers were men of distinction and close personal friends of the deceased and his father. The active pall bearers were Judge R. E. Umbel, Lee Smith, Esq.; W. L. Gans, Esq.; Thomas P. Jones, Esq., and Charles Harsh, all of Uniontown; John Tolar, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y.; George R. Tillson, of New Jersey, and A. S. Fleming, Esq., of Fairmont, W. Va. The men who acted in an honorary capacity were: Hon. S. Leslie Mestezat, justice of the supreme court of Pennsylvania; Hon. Nathaniel Ewing, ex-judge of the United States district court, now chairman of the railroad commission of Pennsylvania; Josiah V. Thompson, banker and business associate; J. Calvin Core, business associate; D. M. Hertzog, Esq., neighbor and prominent attorney; W. F. Frederick, family friend and buiness associate; A. F. Cooper, M. C., from Fayette county, Pa.; W. H. Graham, M. C. from Allegheny county, Pa.; Captain W. Harry Brown, of Pittsburg and General James C. Frazer, of Morgantown, W. V., business associates.

In appreciation of the real worth of the deceased the following editorial appeared in the Morning Herald of our city the day following the funeral:

"The funeral of Percy Bayard Cochran yesterday afternoon was one of the most impressive ever held in Uniontown. It was fittingly so. The sublimity of a correct life should find its most appropriate expression in the personal esteem made evident when that life is terminated. For all who knew the deceased in the quick felt constrained to honor the memory of the dead, and the tributes to this memory came as spontaneously as the gentle rain from heaven.

"In the many marks of respect which found their expression yesterday there lies a lesson. The end of mundane things for all of us is inevitable. Shall our conduct here below merit the sincere and ready tribute of our fellowmen when the angel of death beckons; or shall it command that perfunctory performance of the obsequies which mere decency demands? That lies with us. Those who knew the deceased now realize why the performance of the last sad rites compelled the impressive atmosphere which surrounded the funeral of Mr. Cochran. Judge R. E. Umbel, of the court before which deceased practiced his profession, recognized his worth in the many tributes to the memory of the deceased expressed by him to his friends. Judge J. O. Van Swearingen, of the same court, exemplified his regard when he adjourned court yesterday and requested that the entire courthouse be closed for the two hours consumed by the services and interment. The other prominent men who composed the lists of honorary and active pall bearers evidenced their reverence for that memory by their presence as sincere mourners. The prominence in life of the departed, as well as the exalted position held by him in their regard, was exemplified further in the presence at the funeral of prominent men and women from a distance.

"But more important than anything else was the note, the one note, dominant not only at the funeral, but on the street, in the church and around the courthouse, where the deceased was best known—that in the death of Percy B. Cochran his immediate family had lost not only a loving and gentle son and brother, but that the community had lost a young man to whom one and all could point and say that in all that makes for the highest ideals in human existence there was a man.'" DOUGLASS.

Mrs. Ann Shannon Douglass, born in Augusta, Ga., September 23, 1829, died in Columbia, Mo., July 24, 1908. At the early age of twelve years, under the teaching of her father, the Rev. James Shannon, afterward president of the University of Missouri, she accepted the Christ as her guide. With an unquestioning trust she followed his lead through the shadows, up into the radiant light "that was never upon land or sea." She was the first child to make confession in the Christian faith, and from the organization of the Church of Christ in Columbia, she welcomed each of its successive ministers to his work in the Master's cause. She was a charter member of the C. W. B. M. and her home was the birthplace of the Columbia auxiliary. In November, 1851, she was united in marriage to Mr. Alexander Douglass. Of the five children born of this union, three survive, Shannon and C. E. Douglass, of Kansas City, and Mrs. Hodge, of Columbia. In her heart was the sunshine of a living faith, and her life, made up of little acts of kindness, little words of sympathy, little deeds of charity, was a lustrous cloth of gold.

GUEST.

We have laid away one of our oldest and most honored members, Uncle James Guest. He was born in Preble county, Ohio, January 13, 1822, and was married in 1850 to Elizabeth Jane White, who survives him. By agreement a few weeks ago they bought for his wife a $250 annuity bond in the Church Extension Society. He had purposed to put a like amount into the orphans' home branch of our benevolence. He was respected by the whole community. He and his surviving companion came into old age beautifully. He has entered God's rest. Chas. H. Caton.

Savannah, Mo.

MILLER.

In Columbia, Mo., August 28, 1908, Mrs. Edna Hibbs Miller, wife of Dr. J. A. Miller. She was a faithful member of the church, the Ladies' Aid Society, the C. W. B. M., and a tireless worker in the W. C. T. U.

PARKER.

Mrs. Georgiana Brandon Parker was born in Cabbell county, Va., February 22, 1851, and died suddenly of heart failure in Columbia, Mo., January 15, 1908. She leaves to her husband and children the precious memory of a beautiful, unselfish life.

STARK.

Elder J. Carroll Stark was born March 11, 1830, at Stow, O. He was the seventh child of a family of thirteen children. In 1853 he married Emily M. Burdick at Stow. She was called home September 9, 1885. To them were born six children, four of whom are still living. In 1890 he married Phoebe E. De Groot, of Augusta, Ill., who survives him. When he was 12 years old he was baptized by Alanson Wilcox, a pioneer preacher of the Christian Church. He walked three miles alone to be baptized and walked home in his wet clothes. He began preaching when he was 20 years old and a few years later became minister of the church at Massillon, O. He was also the minister of the following churches: New York City and Poestenkill, N. Y.; Akron, O.; Greensburg, Ind.; Gallatin and Macon City, Mo.; Davenport, Ia.; Rochester, Minn.; Sioux Falls, S. D.; Princeton, Ohio own, Bella Plains, Antioch, Augusta, Table Grove, Greenview, Salem, DuQuoin, Blandinsville and Hamilton Ill. In addition to his work as minister at these places he engaged extensively in evangelistic work. During his ministry of 58 years he held meetings in 22 states and territories and Canada. These meetings resulted in the addition of thousands to the churches. He also held many debates on various religious subjects. He contributed frequently to our papers and published a noteworthy book, entitled "The King and His Kingdom." His last regular ministry was at Hamilton, Ill., in 1895-1896. Since then he had made his home and preached frequently for nearby churches. He was spending this winter on a ranch near McMinnville, Tenn., and preaching almost every Sunday to the mountain people. Though in his seventy-ninth year he retained to a remarkable degree his mental and physical powers. On October 28, 1908, while apparently in his usual good health and engaged in his duties about the place, he was suddenly summoned to the life beyond. His body was brought back to Illinois and laid away in the family burial grounds at Augusta. The funeral services were conducted at that place by Judge C. J. Scofield, of Carthage, and the writer. Truly this man of God had through a long life of service for the Master fought a good fight, finished his course and kept the faith.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Hot Springs, Dec. 3.—Thirty-seven in our meeting. If we had the house room so the people could hear we would have had many more. Percy G. Cross is doing fine work.—T. N. Kincaid.

Illinois.

Palmyra, Dec. 7.—Two confessions at our service last night. No invitation was given during the first week of the meeting. I have a very large chorus, the singers from all the churches assisting. I sing at Mason City, Ia., in February for G. E. Roberts. This will be the second meeting with him.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Barry, Dec. 7.—Nine additions here yesterday and great services.—W. H. Kern.

Galesburg, Dec. 5.—Assisted by William Leigh, of Akron, O., as singing evangelist, we conducted an evangelistc campaign of nearly five and one-half weeks, with home forces, which resulted in 66 additions. Of this number, 27 were confessions, five reclaimed and 24 by letter and statement. All but seven were adults.—J. A. Barnett.

Taylorville, Nov. 22.—M. L. Pontius, minister, sends a report of what he says is the greatest spiritual uplift in the history of this church. This came in a meeting held by W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., in which there were 56 additions. Brother Pontius is enthusiastic in his admiration of Brother Book who, he says, cares nothing about the psychology of repentance, but the burden of whose message is the Spirit-filled word, and the Christ of God as the only remedy for sin. He made an impression on the church and city which will remain for many years. Brother Pontius continued the meeting for a week.

Indiana.

Fort Wayne, Dec. 7.—Last night closed the best meeting in the history of the Third Church. L. C. Howe, of New Castle, Ind., was the evangelist, and is a true pastor-evangelist. Brother Howe could remain no longer than Wednesday, and in that time 43 were added—the largest meeting results ever experienced in this field of Catholicism, Lutheranism and the saloon. We continued the meetings with home forces. W. P. Shamhart, pastor of W. Creighton Church (Second), spoke for us on Thursday night, and is a willing and ready worker. Yesterday there were four additions by confession, making 47 in all. This leaves our membership 132 against 52 when we took the work, July, 1907.—H. E. Stafford, minister.

Iowa.

Oskaloosa, Dec. 9.—The church here closed a meeting on December 3 of a month's duration, with 63 added to the roll. R. W. Abberley, of Rushville, Ind., did the preaching and Leroy St. John was the leader of song. Brother Abberley is a peerless preacher, accurate, clear and convincing, and Brother St. John is an inspiring master of song.—M. Hodge.

Davenport, Dec. 8.—We closed a very successful four-weeks' meeting, resulting in 56 additions—44 confessions, 12 otherwise; 20 were heads of families. This is the greatest and best meeting in the history of the church. The membership has been unified, due to the able preaching of our beloved pastor, S. M. Perkins, who has opened up the scriptures to the people as never before. —E. R. Moor.

Des Moines, Dec. 7.—Report from the Des Moines ministers' meeting, December 6, is as follows: Central (Idleman), two confessions, two by letter; Chinese Tabernacle (Brown), four confessions, nine by letter; Grant Park (Horne), 21 confessions, 20 by statement; University (Medbury), five by letter, one by confession; Capitol Hill (Van Horne), one by letter.

Kansas.

Great Bend, Dec. 7.—Twenty-three added to date—all adults but one—twelve of them men. This is the hardest field I have had. B. A. Fuller and A. M. Zimmerman, singers; H. W. Nicholson, pastor.—M. B. Ingle, evangelist.

Osborne, Dec. 3.—Edward Clutter is in a meeting at Osborne, Kan., where W. J. Loyd is minister.

Havensville, Dec. 5.—The meeting here has been in progress a little over a week, and continues with increasing interest. God is with us in his spirit's power. The church is greatly awakened and strengthened. Three additions to date. Nearly all who attend are professors of religion. The Baptist brethren are enjoying the meeting. Every one in the Sunday-school large enough has been brought into the church in previous meetings, so we can not expect a large ingathering in this meeting. F. H. Bentley is the beloved minister. Bert J. Bentley, the pastor's brother, singing evangelist, is leading the music. These are fine people with whom to labor.—J. P. Haner, evangelist.

Council Grove, Dec. 4.—On November 22 we closed a two and a half-weeks' meeting at a schoolhouse about five miles from Marion, which resulted in 15 baptisms—two reclaimed, 10 from other religious bodies, and 12 by letter from the Christian Church—forming an organizaton of 39 members. Mrs. Gilmore led a splendid chorus during the entire meeting. I expect to go back soon and comolete the organization for them. I begin my work here next Lord's day, having closed at Marion, last.—H. M. Gilmore.

Michigan.

Fremont, Nov. 30.—Four additions to the church at our regular services last night—two by confession and two from another religious body. —A. R. Adams.

Benton Harbor, Nov. 30.—We have had two additions since coming to this church a few weeks ago. We are expecting a forward movement along all lines. Fine audiences.—T. W. Bellingham, minister.

Missouri.

Windsor, Dec. 7.—W. A. Morrison recently held a short meeting at Pleasant Green Schoolhouse with six confessions, who took membership at Windsor; also two others at Windsor recently.

Newton, Dec. 7.—We are in a protracted meeting here, with a big church, a big attendance and a big snow. Brother Matchett is the pastor of this church, and is much loved for his work's sake.—T. M. Myers.

Tarkio, Dec. 7.—One baptism Wednesday night, making ten baptisms. There have been fifteen additions in the regular services since we took up the work June 15, none having ben reported to date.—T. M. Grimes, minister.

Lexington, Dec. 5.—W. H. Briney, of Louisville, Ky., has just closed one of the most delightful meetings ever held in this church. Each evening for three weeks he preached to a large and enthusiastic congregation. He left the church in what is considered the best condition of its entire history. The meeting was absolutely free from sensationalism of any sort, and the good accomplished will be permanent. Theer were 23 valuable additions to the church.—R. B. Briney.

Mountain View, Dec. 5.—Our meeting at Brumley, Mo., closed with 14 additions. There were 15 deaths in the neighborhood during the meeting—three funerals one day. I begin a meeting at Elmer, Mo., December 12.—T. J. Head.

St. Joseph, Dec. 8.—We closed a short meeting Sunday night in which Brother Shreve, pastor of King Hill Church, did the preaching, assisted by our pastor, T. H. Capp, and D. B. Hollinger directed the choir. There were seven additions—three of whom were "brothers-in-law" of the church—six confessions and one reclaimed. The church was greatly strengthened.—S. Moser, superintendent Sunday-school.

New Mexico.

East Las Vegas, Dec. 3.—Held a short meeting at Roy in November, and organized a church of 24 members. There were four from United Brethren and two baptisms. I spend one Sunday at Las Vegas. The work is prospering under the ministry of M. E. Dutt.—Frederick F. Grim, corresponding secretary.

Ohio.

Minerva, Dec. 4.—Seven added by baptism the last three weeks.—J. A. Wharton.

Toledo, Dec. 7.—A very interesting and instructive meeting conducted by Evangelist F. A. Wight closed last night at the East Church. There were seven additions by baptism and eight by letter and statement. Brother Wight is an excellent teacher. This work moves along nicely under the leadership of F. M. Pitman.—N. B. Garver.

Ray, Dec. 7.—Our meeting after continuing one week closed last night on account of diphtheria. Begin a meeting to-morrow night at Alensville, O.—Frank A. Higgins.

Akron, Dec. 7.—The revival conducted by C. D. Mitchell and his singer, E. E. Bilby, in the Wabash Avenue Church, was a great success for the place. In many ways the meeting was better than any ever held here before. The audiences were larger, additions more numerous, and the co-operation of the other churches in the city more consistent than ever before. Brother Mitchell did some excellent preaching, and there were 67 who responded to the call. Professor Bilby is not only a good singer but an exceptionally fine cartoonist.—A. F. Stahl, minister.

Oregon.

Roseburg, Dec. 1.—Three added recently—one by statement and two by letter. We are now arranging for our annual meeting the first of the year. Work moves along well.—B. W. Bass.

Portland, Nov. 25.—Evangelist S. W. Jackson and wife came to Sellwood Lord's day, Oct. 25, and began a series of meetings, which continued three weeks, resulting in 44 additions. Brother Jackson is an efficient worker, and his wife as a leader of chorus singing has few equals.—J. O. Adams, 545 Miller's Ave.

Pennsylvania.

Pittsburg, Dec. 7.—After two weeks' illustration through travelogues in Palestine and Egypt in lieu of other evangelistic services, December 6 was decision day for the Knoxville congregation; 10 responded by confession and one by statement; in the evening three more made the confession. At night the weather was wet, making travel hard, and many were unable to be present. —James Matthews.

New Castle, Nov. 30.—We have just closed a short meeting in the Central Church, with home forces. In all there were 14 additions. The church has been greatly strengthened, and we believe it is now well on the upward road.—A. H. Jordan, minister.

Texas.

Laredo, Dec. 5.—Twenty-five members organized for work and about $1,000 raised as a start towards the erection of a house of worship was the result of a 10-days' meeing in Pearsall, Texas, recently held by the writer.—D. D. Boyle.

Yoakum, Nov. 30.—Meeting eight days old with 22 additions—16 confessions. Have had stormy weather and a settled plan of the other churches to keep people away from our meetings. Brother McKinney is leader of song. Many of the members are doing good work in the meeting.—D. T. Stanley.

Yoakum, Nov. 23.—Edward McKinney, as singer, and I began a meeting here yesterday, after a preliminary meeting the night before. There were 10 additions the first day—eight by confession. This was fully one-tenth of the audience. There is an outlook for a good meeting.—D. T. Stanley, evangelist.

Washington.

Waterville, Dec. 2.—A great and a glorious victory for Christ is our report of the meeting here. The meetings continued through November. The church was very much discouraged and some wanted to give up. There were 33 additions—26 confessions and four by statement, and three from other religious bodies. From fourth place the church now ranks first.—W. T. Adams, state evangelist.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

HOW WOULD JESUS KEEP CHRISTMAS?

Topic Dec. 23. Matt. 5:38-48; 26:6-13.

It is always an interesting query: "What would Jesus do?" That the big, busy world is really curious in this matter was shown in an interesting way when Charles M. Sheldon wrote his book, "In His Steps; or, What Would Jesus Do?" So popular was this little book that great daily papers gave up their columns to notices of its publication, and not a few of them published the entire story in their pages. Perhaps no volume of modern times, unless it may have been "Uncle Tom's Cabin," had such a run of popularity. Millions of copies of it were sold in all sorts of editions, and it still has a large circulation. What was the secret of this remarkable popular favor? Apart from the simple story it tells, there is the rather startling question, "What would Jesus do?" And it was this that stirred the hearts of men and women, both in the churches and out. After all, the weary old world has a perennial interest in the story of the Christ and his interests in mankind. We should like to know what he would do were he here in this twentieth century. The heart of the world still turns with lingering longing to the loving heart of the Christ of the Centuries. And spite of our intense commercialism of to-day, of our bitter and often unbrotherly strife, our grasping after the things we can hold in our hands and carry in our pockets and store away in cubby-holes and safety vaults, we turn to him in our weariness and want of the better and abiding things and seek once more the simpler joys of childhood and pray again the prayers we learned at mother's knee. It is good for us to thus seek and ask, while the Christ stands, as ever of old, at the door of the heart of humanity, knocking that he may enter as the Guest of childhood, manhood and age. Would that we indeed might open unto him this Christmastide.

"How would Jesus keep Christmas?" I confess I had never thought of it. Had you? But now that I am thinking, I find myself wondering. Somehow I feel that Jesus would enter heartily into the simple pleasures and holiest joys of the holiday. It would be to him a holy day, fragrant with gladness and goodwill, such as gave the angels' song its message on the night so long ago, when he was born a babe in Bethlehem, and cradled in a manger. This story of the birth of the Christ-Child is the most beautiful story in all the history of the world. It has in it all the poetry of humanity. No man or set of men invented it. Its simplicity is its supremest charm. At the manger God and Man meet; and there we shall continue to worship. The Messiah of the manger is the Messiah of all mankind.

The Christ who, while he was here among men, went about doing good, would certainly do likewise if he were here to-day. Let this assurance enter into all our hearts. My heart is glad in the thought, in the midst of a busy and bothered life. It is good for us to relax our grasp on the things of the world for a little while at the Christmas season. The pitiful thing about it all is that multitudes know not the meaning of it and other multitudes are so tied up in the great commercial affairs of the world that they have not time or opportunity to enter into its joys. The spirit of commercialism has to a large extent entered into the Christmas season. There seems no way to help it. So let us strive to conduct our business as Jesus would have us do.

The spirit of goodwill is the very spirit of the Christmas time. His message for us all is found in the closing part of the fifth chapter of Matthew. Indeed, it would be well for us all once more to read afresh the Sermon on the Mount, not stopping at the Beatitudes, albeit the meaning of these "blesseds" of Jesus have scarcely begun to enter into our waking thoughts and working hours. Nevertheless, the fact of Christmas is a reminder of the unspeakable gift of God to us all.

The School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

"All aboard for the School of the Evangelists." In response to this hearty invitation of Pres. Ashley S. Johnson I climbed into the hack one afternoon at Knoxville, Tenn., to visit the unique school we have all heard of.

Our way lay twelve miles east from the city, a delightful ride through the beautiful hills. On the way I plied President Johnson and his wife with questions about the school and their life work, their "boys," the country about us, the work their "boys" are doing in the world,—and thus engaged, the way was not long. Just at dusk we rounded the shoulder of a hill, and President Johnson asked me to enjoy the first view of Kimberlin Heights. My eye enjoyed a sweep of beautiful scenery, river and valley and hill, a commodious farm home with substantial buildings, and on the hill the college buildings, the gymnasium, the newest of the group.

After supper the President asked me to go to the evening prayer-meeting. On the way we walked by the aid of electric light, which illuminates not only the buildings, but also the grounds. I found myself approaching a very substantial looking college building, and was soon seated in a clean and neat chapel, finished in hardwood, seated with opera chairs, platform furniture substantial and in good taste, art glass memorial windows bearing the names of friendly donors, and soon the room full of young men were singing to the accompaniment of the piano, and then they prayed. Short prayers followed in swift succession. Every evening they meet to pray. When the prayer hour comes the lights in all the rooms go out except in the chapel. Thus they meet every evening and pray simply and earnestly for every thing they need.

When they were dismissed President Johnson said, "Let me show you the 'upper room.'" So we climbed up into the tower, and stood with uncovered heads in the holy place. A small room, a square of carpet, a single chair, a radiator for warmth, on the walls numerous photos of friends of the school,—and here the President and his boys come to pray in secret. On the wall is a program which allows any one to choose a quarter hour for himself, when he may be alone with God; and who would question that the success of this unique school does not follow as a matter of course in answer to such prayers?

The next morning I had a beautiful view from my room of the river and the hills. When I went to the school I was surprised at the clean and substantial buildings. The Industrial Hall, with its twenty-seven rooms, shelters 54 young men. The college building is a fine brick structure which would be a credit to any of our schools. It contains a roomy chapel, a large library, roomy and bright class rooms, and is clean, clean, clean. Adjoining it is the dormitory, a solid brick building accommodating 96 young men in its 48 rooms, with dining room and kitchen below.

Between the Dormitory and Industrial Hall is the power house, containing the great boiler which supplies steam for heat to the buildings, and power to run the dynamo, the laundry, and the grist mill. Under this roof are the bakery, the lavatory and the shower baths.

One hundred and forty young men from nearly every state are now here, and others on the way will fill the buildings at the opening of the next term. They are young men who wish to prepare to preach the gospel, but whose very limited means would deprive them of attendance upon any other school. They are a bright-faced, clean-lived bunch of fellows, who would be a credit to any of our schools.

There are only eight of them able to pay their way full, one hundred dollars in money. All the others are working their way through. Some work all the time for eight months and receive two years' schooling in return. Others work three and a half hours a day while they study and pay $36.25 for their tuition. One takes care of the horses, another is in charge of the creamery, one cares for the fine hogs, one cares for the poultry, two care for the herd of milch cows, one is the cook, two care for the electric lighting plant, others are teamsters, others are waiters, helpers in the office, janitors, librarian. There is not an idle one in the whole number.

And the course of study? Six years of hard work, and sixty per cent of it is the Bible. The young man who is diligent is given a good education and is inspired with the desire to study. This is evident in the fact that many of them go from Kimberlin Heights to schools where opportunities of advanced work are possible.

President Johnson and his wife give their time to the Bible classes. Prof. M. L. Pierce teaches homiletics, English and Bible doctrine. Prof. W. H. Groves has charge of the department of mathematics, and Prof. Anderson is over the department of ancient languages. The faculty are all experienced teachers and graduates of our own schools, having earned good degrees.

How is this school supported? President Johnson told me it called for a thousand dollars a month. Where does he get it? First of all are the proceeds of the farm of 250 acres which are all devoted to the school. President Johnson and his wife receive just what the students do, food and raiment. Every thing on the farm is devoted to this work of the Lord. President Johnson devotes the proceeds of the sales of his books also. This leaves over three thousand dollars a year to secure, and it comes from a multitude of friends in answer to earnest and continual prayer.

Ten dollars will pay the expense one day, in addition to the income from the farm and the book sales. Many people are on the list of daily supporters. One dollar will pay for the bread the boys eat at one meal. In the corridor of the college building is posted a list of those who are supplying the daily bread, for breakfast, for dinner, or for supper, or for the day. Every mail brings money, more or less to supplement the work of the boys and the devotion of President Johnson and his wife, and thus the Lord cares for this group of young men who have devoted their lives to the ministry of his word.

What will be the future of this work? When I asked this question of President Johnson he said that the farm would be left to the school, and the Lord would continue to raise up friends after he and Mrs. Johnson are gone.

Would you like to help? Send what you will to President Johnson. It helps the young men who could go nowhere else. This school has sent into all our states some of our most faithful and efficient men, who, but for this opportunity, would never have been trained for the work. Every night while I was there they were praying the Lord of the harvest to send them more young men, to fill the few remaining rooms. They will come. Liberal hearts who read this simple story will wish to help care for them.

Just the Same—Only Different.

Rallies as a rule are rallies. Some are Easter, some are fall, some are June, and others are just rallies. And they're all for the one purpose of enhancing the interest in the Bible school work. Attracting attention thereto, if you please. Ohio's Bible schools are going into a simultaneous statewide, midwinter rally, which is just the same as other rallies only different—different in time and in scope.

It is pretty generally agreed that about the most difficult time to hold a rally would be in midwinter, and just after the Christmas holidays, and so we have set a hard task for the schools of Ohio in that we have asked for a midwinter rally for January 10, 1909. Our schools are all urged to enter into this rally with spirit. Let us see if we can't double our average attendance on that day and then drop a post-card to the state superintendent, apprising him of the results of the day as to attendance, offering and Adult classes organized.

We are desirous that by this date all our schools will see the desirability and advantage of putting a Cradle Roll and Home Department into active operation, and to further the interests of the Adult Department by having all classes organized and reported to the state superintendent, as well as certificated by the state association. May we not expect every one of our Ohio readers to enter into the spirit of this rally, and undertake to double the attendance of your particular school? This can be done by constant talk, talk, talk, and persistent work, work, work! We hopefully look forward for the results of this unique rally.

Teacher Training at Hamilton, Ill.

Special interest in teacher training was aroused in Hamilton a year ago last summer, when Marion Stevenson delivered two courses of lectures at our Chautauqua on the Bible and the Bible school. These lectures were received with enthusiasm and marked a new era in the Bible schools of Hamilton and vicinity.

Every teacher in our school was willing to take up the work. It was not difficult to enlist others. For convenience the class was divided, half meeting in the afternoon and half at night. By this arrangement every member was present, with few exceptions, at every lesson. Frequent written tests prepared some unaccustomed to writing examinations for the state examination.

Two simple things I believe helped materially to sustain the interest until the very end of the course. First, the adaptation of the lessons to our own school. Lessons on supplementary work, classification were immediately put into practical use in our school. Lessons on "Lesson Preparation," "Principles, Methods and Steps in Teaching" were constantly illustrated by the use of the coming Bible school lesson. Second, the use of reference books on subject treated. I happened to have in my library some books dealing with subjects studied in the latter part of the course, such as, "The Point of Contact in Teaching," "How to Conduct a Sunday School," "Seven Laws of Teaching," "Black's Practical Primary Plans," "The Pedagogical Bible School," "The Making of a Teacher," and "Hints on Child Training." Placing these at the disposal of the class and referring frequently to passages in them for further information on subjects brought up, stimulated the interest so that these books were in constant use by the class. So much did the class appreciate the value of this feature that they raised $10 for the purchase of some other books for the beginning of a Bible School Workers' Library.

A simple five minutes drill during the opening exercises has familiarized the whole school with the books of the Bible, Bible characters, missions, scripture passages, etc., and stimulated interest in teacher training.

When about half through the course we started two new classes in the regular school. These classes are doing excellent work under the direction of two members of the first class. We believe these classes will be a permanent feature in our school.

Our immediate plans include the organization of an advanced class and a union class.

Our Illinois helpers are busy these days and will soon hear from others.

A Question of Definition.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

We are now in the midst of our preparation for the celebration of the centenary of the publication to the world of that epoch-making irenic, Thomas Campbell's "Declaration and Address." It is a somewhat disconcerting thought that just now the brotherhood that has been called into being by that manifesto and which has sought to exemplify its principles in its own associated life and to urge them on the Christian world as the solution of the problem of our divisions, should be rent by the bitterest controversy in its history,—a controversy in which brethren, whose soundness in "the faith," as we have always defined it, is never for a moment called in question, are being denounced as notoriety-seekers and infidels, and the peace of the brotherhood is destroyed and their plea made a laughing-stock to the world. It is a time when every man among us who has a word of peace should speak, and I am writing to you to assure you that many of us are looking to you for leadership in this crisis, as we have done for many a year, and to assure you of our willingness to follow you in all things that make for the peace and progress of the brotherhood.

It seems to me that the supreme obligation of the moment is to seek for the underlying unities. In order to do this, we must first of all seek to understand one another. Of course there will be some on both sides that will make no effort to understand those that disagree with them;—they do not want to understand them; it is to their interest to misunderstand and misinterpret; they do not live much with Christ and have not much of his spirit and their weapons are those of the world. It may be necessary to deal severely with such, especially when they are in positions of responsibility. But the great mass of the brotherhood are not so; they are neither "progressive" nor "conservative" in any partisan sense; they are unwilling to believe that new phrases and new formulas are necessarily evidences of disloyalty to the old truth; they may be skeptical of that which is new, and disposed to look closely into it, lest, in accepting it, they should lose their Christ and their Bible, but they are eager for all that is good, and are sincerely desirous above all things to understand their brethren and to do them no injustice. And they are desirous at all hazards to preserve and hand down to their successors the Christian freedom of thought and utterance which our fathers purchased at such cost and which has been fundamental to our plea as a people.

In the case of Brother Willett and his recent utterance on the subject of miracle, I believe that the underlying unity is to be found in a definition of terms. Most of our controversies are logomachies; a little attention to definitions resolves them into agreements. There is very much yet to be done among us in this direction, for in the past we have used words of even technical meaning with the utmost looseness, and if we are to have an uproar every time a man among us feels it necessary to rescue some great word from this careless usage and give it a definite content, there is many a distressful season before us! The time has come when, if our thought is to be co-ordinated with that of the religious bodies around us, and with the world of science and philosophy which it is our duty to Christianize, we must accurately define our terms; there is no option. Otherwise we can not know where there are real differences, or where our supposed differences are merely verbal. If we go on attaching fictitious or peculiar meanings to words and reading fictitious meanings into one another's and others' sentences, then we shall always be fighting make-believe battles and burning effigies of make-believe heretics, and will be traitors to the cause for which the fathers labored and suffered.

Now I have said that I believe the irenic in the case of Brother Willett is to be found in a definition of terms. And, as I understand the position, the key-word is the word "supernatural." Now that word has to be defined anew if miracle is to be made possible to the man of modern scientific and philosophical training. Are such men to be neglected in the interest of those of us who are satisfied with eighteenth century definitions and who do not wish to be disturbed in our views? What is the Christian teacher to do if he is to make no effort to bridge this chasm between faith and science? Simply dogmatize? Many voices are telling us that the church to-day is alienating not only the wage-earning classes, but also the intellectual classes, and dogmatism will do this more and more. The only possible way to make belief in miracle possible to-day is by redefining this crucial word "supernatural." It must not be defined so as to make it meaningless, but so as to make it mean something to men who receive their training in the modern Christian university. Now it seems to me that that is what Brother Willett is endeavoring to do. Others, too, with reverence and sincerity and great ability, are setting themselves to the same task. Here are the words of Rev. E. P. Boys-Smith, in an article on the "Mental Characteristics" (of Christ), in Hastings' "Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels." Writing under the sub-head of "Jesus' Characteristic Outlook on Life" (p. 165f), Mr. Boys-Smith says:

"One can not escape the feeling that while others looked only at the surface of life, the Master looked through its surface and saw its depth: we see life usually in two dimensions, he looked at it in three, and so saw reality. Of course from his standpoint all its proportions were very different from those which appear to us. * * * The Beatitudes are an instance. Their chief effect, and it can not be doubted their chief purpose, is to set the hearer on a new standpoint, and so enable him to gain a new view of life. * * * It is in connection with this far profounder view of life which we find in him that we are best able to understand the 'powers that worked in' the Lord Jesus (Mk. 6:14), and his consciousness in regard to them. The term 'miracles' can hardly fail to prove misleading, as it is so closely associated with the eighteenth century point of view, which considered them as exceptions to natural law, and as owing their evidential value to the fact that they were exceptions. That view is quite obsolete and impossible now to a really scientific mind: it was always singularly unappreciative of 'the mind of Christ.' There can be no doubt that Jesus himself felt complete certainty that he did wield powers of an extraordinary and practically limitless kind (cf. Mt. 26:51-53), and that his contemporaries never dreamt of disputing the fact. But to him they were certainly neither 'unnatural' nor 'supernatural.' The distinction drawn by the latter term is quite alien to his mind, and inconsistent with his point of view; for him the continuous character and flow of life was a fundamental idea, and the one unbroken reality included equally what we describe as 'natural' and 'supernatural.' The 'powers' of which he was conscious had their proper place and scope in life as he saw it; and if it is not possible for us to assign this, or to explain them, that is due probably to the simple fact that as already said, we try to see the reality of life from the standpoint of two dimensions, and can succeed so little in seeing it from that of three as he did."

The work from which the above is taken is from the same editor, Dr. James Hastings, as the new Dictionary of the Bible that has recently supplanted all other similar works in our libraries. The difference is that this book was written especially for preachers, and is much more conservative in its attitude on critical questions than the Dictionary of the Bible,—it is written down to preachers; an acceptable service, but a questionable compliment! The above statement, therefore, may be regarded as strictly conservative, and as reflecting the commonplace of Christian philosophy. Is there anything in such language that should lead us to say hard words about the thinker? Does not this conserve all the truth, and at the same time harmonize our faith with our knowledge, and make it possible for both to dwell together in the same heart? It seems to me that here we have the underlying unity for which we seek, and that there is no more any occasion for saying hard words. Faithfully yours.

Earle M. Todd.

Manchester, N. H., October 14, 1908.

[The foregoing was written several weeks ago, as the date shows. Since then the issue has shifted. The question is now one of Christian liberty. Has any brother the right to our Christian recognition and fellowship whose views on Biblical criticism differ from those of his brethren? The issue involves the integrity of our plea for unity. Brother Todd is right as to the value of definition. If we could always understand each other's terms in the same sense, it would from many a blunder free us, and foolish controversy.—EDITOR.]

BIBLE INSTITUTE.

To the Bible Student:
It may be your duty to PREACH
the unfathomed riches of Christ. The poignant need for preachers is a divine call to spiritual men who love God and to enter the ministry, to endure hardship for Christ and the lost, to become filled with the Bible,
THE WORD
THE STRONGEST FORCE
for the salvation of the lost. If too old to take a regular course, investigate the one year's residence plan of the Pastor's College. Send for catalog. The ministry is the best and most joyous calling and the Disciples are noted for their lucid unfolding of the sacred Word. We offer a synthetic survey of the whole Bible, in ten lectures and ten charts. Some churches have paid $100 for such a course and felt repaid. This Bible Institute conserves the best ideas of the Campells, adds some later, cleaves to the view of the Old Testament held by the Master and is as wide awake as the 20th Century.
THE PASTOR
can use this Institute (1) as a course of lectures, with its appeal to both Eyegate and Eargate, thus making the Book new to many. (2) As a solid, instructive introduction to a protracted meeting. (3) As a basis for weekly expositions, covering the Bible in three years.
THE EVANGELIST
will find it full of meat. It gives a clear understanding of the Bible as a unit, its plan, purpose and power; it brings out the strong evidence of prophecy; points out the inspired way of salvation; convicts of sin and of the absolute dependence on Christ; gives the true platform and method of Christian union; demonstrates the impregnable strength of our position and maps out the certain destiny of every hearer.
THE BEGINNER
ought to have this Institute for the abundance of deep truths by which we have won our victories, for the five books which lead to profitable and pleasant Bible study, for a graded road to the ministry. He can soon learn to preach, then support himself in school.

A minister wrote: "Your ideas are grand for the advanced minister—but can the young men understand?" It is the triumph of the teacher to bring the deepest ideas within the grasp of the student. However, when writing for circular, ask for a copy of our "Sublimest Drama of the Ages." If you can appreciate and enjoy the profoundest truths that ever thrilled the angels to wonder and to song, you can safely order the Institute.

The Two Mothers.

BY WILL A. DIXON.

She was a cat, but she staid at home,
And guarded her little mewing young;
She was a cat, that did not roam,
She laid with her babies and purred and sung;
And the kittens grew as the day went by,
And never the cat was heard to cry,
For a mother's love 'neath the maltese fur
Was guarded well in the heart of her.
She was a cat.

She was a woman and did not stay
To watch o'er her babe and tend it well;
She was a woman and every day
Her heart grew cold and the love-beats fell,
She thought of herself the livelong day
And she'd leave the babe and hurry away
To the party or club, or store or show,
But she had a right to go, you know—
She was a woman.

The kittens grew well and staid and strong,
Guarded by the mother who loved them best,
The cat each day sang sweet her song
And guarded her brood in their little nest;
The babe—ah! the babe, grew weaker each day,
While the mother trod fashion's pathday broad,
Till under the sod it was laid away
And its spirit sweet went back to God,
For she was a woman of fashion, you know,
In the limelight gay of the passing show.
'Tis well, perhaps, to take note of that,
One a queen of fashion, the other a cat.

FACTS AND NOTIONS OF THE EMPEROR OF CHINA.

BY MYRON C. WILCOX, PH. D.

From ancient times the Chinese government has been regarded as a theocracy with Heaven as the chief god, while the emperor is called the Tien-Tze, or "Son of Heaven." In the Shoo King we read: "Great Heaven, having given this Middle Kingdom with its people and territories to the former kings, do you, our present sovereign, employ your virtue, effecting a gentle harmony among the deluded people, leading and urging them on. So you will please the former kings who also received their appointment from Heaven."

Back before the time of Abraham, when the Emperor Shun found it difficult to persuade Yu to become his successor, he finally resorted to this argument, which would even overcome the hesitancy of the average American office seeker: "The determinate will of Heaven rests upon your person; you must eventually ascend the throne of the great sovereign."

When a Chinese ruler ascends the throne it is said that he "receives from Heaven and revolving nature the government of the world." Hence the Emperor is held responsible for the course of nature as well as for the good behavior of the people. All sorts of natural calamities are charged to him. He is held accountable for the eclipses of the sun and moon, which phenomena, it is believed, are caused by something wrong in his conduct or in the conduct of the Empress.

It is well known that the throne of the Chinese Emperor is called "The Dragon Throne." Those who look upon the Emperor are said to "see the Dragon Face," and when an Emperor dies it is said that he has "ascended on a dragon to be a guest on high." A dragon is the imperial coat of arms and the emblem on the national flag, all of which shows how prominent this fabulous being is in the Chinese mind.

To the people of China the dragon is a real personage. How strange that one of their most beneficent beings, or I might say deities—beneficent if treated right—should in the sacred writings of Christians be the symbol of Satan. (Rev. 20:2.) Christianity also wrought a marked change in the Greek word daimon, formerly used for a spirit, good or evil.

The emperors regard their predecessors, even of other dynasties, as still invested with power in Hades and their presence and aid are invoked by sacrifices and prayers. Part of a royal prayer is as follows: "I think of you, my sovereign ancestors, whose glorious souls are in heaven. As from an overflowing fountain run the happy streams, such is the relation between you and your descendants. I, a distant descendant, look back and offer this bright sacrifice to you, the honored from age to age."

We should be careful not to clothe such words as heaven, heavenly, etc., when occurring in heathen prayers and writings, with the ideas they convey to Christian minds.

The father of a newly chosen Emperor is generally forced to retire into obscurity or, in some cases, to commit suicide. Such unfortunates, as well as royal criminals, are sometimes allowed to make way with themselves by inhaling gold leaf, as was supposed to be true of some of the Boxer leaders. Some heartless wag has suggested that in such cases the victims died from a consciousness of internal gilt!—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Hope On.

Hope, child! To-morrow hope, and then again to-morrow,
And then to-morrow still! Trust in a future day,
Hope, and each morn the skies new light from dawn shall borrow.
As God is there to bless, let us be there to pray. —Victor Hugo.

Abba, in thine eternal years
Bethink thee of our fleeting day;
We are but clay;
Bear with our foolish joys, our foolish tears,
And all the wilfulness with which we pray.
When she is froward, querulous, or wild,
Thou knowest, Abba, how in each offense,
I stint not patience, lest I wrong the child
Mistaking for revolt defect of sense,
For wilfulness mere spritliness of mind;
Thou knowest how often, seeing, I am blind;
How when I turn her face against the wall
And leave her in disgrace,
And will not look at her and speak at all,
I long to speak and long to see her face;
And how, when twice, for something grievous done,
I could but smite, and though I lightly smote,
I felt my heart rise strangling in my throat;
And when she wept I kissed the poor red hands.
All these things, Father, a father understands;
And am I not thy son?

Abba, in thine eternal years
Bethink thee of our fleeting day;
From all the rapture of our eyes and ears
How shall we tear ourselves away?
At night my little one says nay,
With prayers implores, entreats with tears
For ten more minutes flying play;
How shall we tear ourselves away?
Yet call and I'll surrender
The flower of soul and sense,
Life's passion and its splendor,
In quick obedience.

Thou'st seen how closely, Abba, when at rest
My child's head nestles to my breast,
And how my arm her little form enfolds,
Lest in the darkness she should feel alone;
And how she holds
My hands, my two hands in her own?

A little easeful sighing
A restful turning round,
And I, too, on thy love relying,
Shall slumber sound.
—William Canton.

"When one can't have his own way," says a cheerful thinker, "he may help the other person to have his way." Our own happiness isn't any more important than the next man's; and it is great fun helping other people to be happy—so much fun that we very soon forget to be miserable because some personal joy is denied us, and "look on the things of others" instead.

The Death-Button.

Safety in railroad travel is a vitally interesting topic, and an article in the Circle a few months ago, entitled, "Making Railroad Travel Safer," gave some remarkable illustrations of the many inventions and automatic appliances which tend to guard the public from danger. One of these is called the "death-button," making provision, as it does, in case of the sudden death or inactivity of the one in charge at the moment on lines where the electric current has been installed as a propelling power.

The well-known "death-button," now in use in the Manhattan Subway trains, is a safety device in line with this future development.

In the top of the electric controller handle, which is moved in a circle over a row of contact buttons by the motorman when he regulates the speed of the train, is a little plunger button which is the real factor in throwing the electric current off and on. It sticks through the handle, and is held up by a spring.

Before he can get any current at all, this button must be pushed down by the palm of the motorman's hand, after which he can move the handle about, and adjust the strength of the current at will.

But should he drop dead at his post, or for any reason remove his hand from the contact, the current would leave the motors, and the car stop.—Wellspring.

A Song in the Night

By David Lyall.

Elspeth Tennant got out of a train at Broad Street station about 3 o'clock on a November afternoon, and made her way down the stairs to the throng of the streets. She paused before committing herself finally to what seemed an inextricable confusion of vehicles and human beings, and casually wondered how any of the latter ever came out of it alive. Her destination was Cannon street, and with the slow care of a home-keeping person, unaccustomed to traffic, she made her way there in due course. She was an insignificant figure, shabbily dressed, but her worn face had great sweetness, her once fine eyes a pathetic note of appeal. She did not need to ask direction, as she had frequently passed the large block of warehouses near the great Cannon Street Hotel, and knew the doorway even before the large brass plate with the names, Metcalf, Dimsdale, Lovitt & Co., arrested her attention. She entered the door, and, following the direction of a pointing finger, ascended to the first floor, where she was confronted with a closed door bearing the usual legend Office. Pushing that open she found herself in a small, narrow space, with a counter barring the way, the rest of the place shut off by screens of obscured glass. A youth with a pen behind his ear appeared, and inquired her business and her name.

"I want to see Mr. Metcalf, if you please."

"He ain't here, ma'am."

"When will he be here, to-morrow?"

"No, he's gone to Guildford till Monday."

"Can I see Mr. Dimsdale or Mr. Lovitt, then?"

"Mr. Lovitt's in, but he's engaged."

"Can I wait until he is disengaged?"

The youth looked doubtful.

"He don't often see ladies; in fact, they don't come, unless insurance ladies, and we knows them."

"I'll wait a few moments, if you please, until the gentleman goes, then you can take my name," said Elspeth, and sank on the hard form against the wall, prepared for a dreary half hour or hour, perhaps, with a possible disappointment at the end of it. But she was agreeably disappointed. Presently the youth looked over the counter at her again.

"He's gone, ma'am, out by the other door. I can take your name, if you like, to Mr. Lovitt. There's nobody with him now."

Elspeth opened her small green bag and took out a square card, with her name lithographed on it in small, neat type. She had bought them at the beginning of her married life for the purpose of paying calls with, but the neighbors at Forest Gate had not been very friendly, and she had only used a very few. She had hunted them out of a seldom-opened drawer for use that day. She waited with a curious sickness of heart, and even when the lad returned, in a moment or so, and said Mr. Lovitt would see her, she was scarcely cheered. She had never seen Mr. Lovitt, who was the youngest partner in the firm from which her husband had just been discharged, but she had heard him spoken of as a hard man, whom it was impossible to get the better of. It was from his hands Tennant had received his dismissal three days before. She stepped in front of the youth through the open door, and the warm air enveloped her kindly; but the room seemed to swim before her eyes, and it was a full moment before her vision cleared and she could command her voice. Then she was aware of an alert figure standing before the fireplace, of a keen, clean shaven face, and a pair of remarkably piercing eyes.

"Good afternoon, Mrs. Tennant; take a chair."

"Thank you; it is very good of you to see me. It was Mr. Metcalf I asked for."

"So I heard. Well, I suppose you have come about Tennant's dismissal. I need hardly remind you how long we have borne with him."

"I know that," she answered dully. "It has been hanging over us for years."

"So long as that! How long is it since you knew him to be unsteady, since he began to take drink?"

"He has always taken it, sir. I knew it when we married. He signed the pledge then, and he kept it for a good many years, in fact, until he came here. Then there was a man who got a great influence over him."

"You are talking of Duncombe, perhaps?"

"Yes."

"I don't know much, if anything, of the private affairs of the staff," said Lovitt. "You asked to see Mr. Metcalf to-day, but it was really I who dismissed your husband."

"Yes, sir, I understand that. I asked for Mr. Metcalf, thinking that, perhaps, as he is a Scotchman, he might take a little more interest in us. You have no other fault to find with my husband, I suppose?"

"Only the slackness which is inevitable in an unsteady man. He had many warnings and knew quite well this would come."

"The outlook is very black for us, Mr. Lovitt. A man discharged without a character at forty-six has not much chance."

"I should say myself that he had none," replied Lovitt, without hesitation. "May I ask what family you have?"

"We have had eight, and six are alive."

"Eight, and you are a young woman yet!"

"Not very young; I was forty-two last week. We have had a good deal of trouble with our family; we have two invalids."

"Two! that is a great misfortune. What is the matter?"

"The eldest son has spine complaint; he has not been off a sofa for seven years. He writes a little, and sometimes makes a pound or two."

"That is a very heavy burden, Mrs. Tennant."

"In one way, yes; but we should not be able to live without Arthur; he is the very centre of our home life. Everyone loves him."

"He is very much upset about this, then?"

"I have not told him, and my husband has not been home since he came to tell me on Tuesday night that he got his discharge. He went down to his sister at Rye Park for a day or two."

"You have not saved anything, I suppose?"

"Nothing whatever; all the surplus has gone in doctor's bills; we have had a great many of these to pay. I did not come here to whine, sir, but to ask something from Mr. Metcalf."

"What was that?"

"If he would help me to start a little business. I used to be a very clever dressmaker, and my delicate daughter would help me. In course of time we might be able to do well, if the rent were guaranteed."

"But that would not help Tennant."

"No, sir, but he will try, of course, to get something else to do."

"You don't blame him very much, I notice. I suppose that otherwise he has been a very good husband to you?"

"The very best, and the children adore him," said Elspeth Tennant as she rose to her feet. Her eyes were welling, and it was her nature to hide her care. No one, least of all the man speaking to her now, would ever know what it had cost her to come to the city that day.

"I am very glad I have seen you, Mrs. Tennant, and I will mention the matter to Mr. Metcalf when he returns to business on Monday. Meanwhile, would you have any objection if I came to pay a call at your house on Sunday afternoon?"

"We should be very pleased to see you, sir," she replied, quite sincerely.

Lovitt bade her good afternoon, and after she was gone pondered the story he had heard. Eight children, and Tennant had never had more than two hundred a year! He was an only son himself, and heir to three separate fortunes, besides being a sharer in one of the most lucrative businesses in the city. Things were unequally divided. He had been very severe on Tennant, determined to keep up a high standard of conduct in Cannon street, but he had not considered all the circumstances. "Poor beggar! I don't blame him if he sought oblivion now and again from the cares of the

Charcoal Purifies Any Breath

And In Its Purest Form Has Long Been Known As the Greatest Gas Absorber.

Pure willow charcoal will oxidize almost any odor and render it sweet and pure. A panful in a foul cellar will absorb deadly fumes, for charcoal absorbs one hundred times its volume in gas.

The ancients knew the value of charcoal and administered it in cases of illness, especialy pertaining to the stomach. In England to-day charcoal poultices are used for ulcers, boils, etc., while some physicians in Europe claim to cure many skin diseases by covering the afflicted skin with charcoal powder.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges go into the mouth and transfer foul odors at once into oxygen, absorb noxious gases and acids and when swallowed mix with the digestive juices and stop gas making fermentation and decay.

By their gentle qualities they control beneficially bowel action and stop diarrhœa and constipation.

Bad breath simply can not exist when charcoal is used. There are no ifs and ands about this statement. Don't take our word for it, but look into the matter yourself. Ask your druggist or physician, or, better still, look up charcoal in your encyclopedia. The beauty of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges is that the highest pharmaceutical expert knowledge obtainable has been used to prepare a lozenge that will give to man the best form of charcoal for use.

Pure willow and honey is the result. Two or three after meals and at bedtime sweeten the breath, stop decay of teeth, aid the digestive apparatus and promote perfect bowel action. They enrich the supply of oxygen to the system and thereby revivify the blood and nerves.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are sold everywhere in vast quantities, thus they must have merit. Every druggist carries them, price, twenty-five cents per box, or send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail, free. Address F. A. family. Eight, by Jove, and two invalids! I like that woman; she's got grit!''

On Sunday morning Elspeth Tennant went to church, and the preacher, a man from the North, chose as his text the words, ''I call to remembrance my song in the night.''

She returned home comforted, and at the mid-day meal the children wondered at her sunshiny face. About 3 o'clock Lovitt came quietly up the path of the trim little garden and knocked at the door, which was opened to him by Janet, the third child, a sweet-faced girl of about sixteen, with large, serious eyes, and fair hair hanging down her back.

''Mr. Lovitt?'' she said, smiling a little, and immediately showed him into the family sitting room, where mother sat, with Arthur, the rest of the children having gone out for a walk.

Mrs. Tennant welcomed him kindly, and even with a sort of quiet dignity. He was struck by the fact that in her own house she was a pretty woman, though her face was faded and careworn. The boy Arthur received him joyfully, and the two were soon talking as if they had been acquainted for years. Lovitt had charming manners, and something in the little household appealed to him, and interested the softer side which is hidden even in the hard man's heart. Mrs. Tennant asked whether he would take a cup of tea; he accepted, and they had a very friendly meal together. Then he said, suddenly, he must go, as he had an engagement in the West End at 6 o'clock.

As he turned away from the gate, down the street, where the lamps had been lighted, he saw a figure coming up which he had no difficulty in recognizing as Tennant. He strode on up the street to meet him, and waited under one of the gas lamps till he came up. He saw that he was perfectly sober.

''Good evening, Tennant.''

Tenant started violently.

''Good evening, sir. I didn't expect to meet you here.''

''Nor I you, Tennant. Walk a little way with me toward the station, will you? I have been at your house.''

''You have—but how, and why?''

''Don't inquire too closely. Suffice to say I've been there. I've had a delightful hour among them. Tennant, you are a worse fool even than I took you for.''

''Yes, sir.''

''I can't understand how you dared, with a wife and a home like that, to play fast and loose with your slender chances. That boy of yours! How haven't you been able to keep straight, for him, if for nothing else? He has a face like an angel.''

''Have they told him—you didn't, sir? We planned, Elspeth and me, to keep it from him as long as we could,'' cried Tennant, and drew his hand across his brow, while his voice vibrated with real anguish. Lovitt's heart smote him. What had he done to help or encourage this weaker brother? He had simply taken his pound of flesh, and when the weight was short fired him out.

''He doesn't know, and if you like, Tennant, he need never know. You can come back to-morrow.''

''Come back, sir! Oh, you can't mean it!''

''I do, and we'll fight this thing together, you and I, for the lad's sake. I'll help you, if you like.''

Tennant could not speak. He wondered, indeed, whether his imagination were not playing him some trick.

''There's my hand on it. We'll talk further to-morrow. You're not in a fit state to discuss it now. Go home to that brave, fine wife of yours, and those bonnie bairns, and buck up, won't you?''

Lovitt strode on, and after a moment's dazed reflection Tennant turned back toward his home. Elspeth heard his key in the lock, and was at the door to welcome him, no reproach on her face.

''Did you meet anybody?''

''Yes—Lovitt. I'm to go back to-morrow. It's to you I owe this, Elspeth, with all the rest.''

She did not say anything, but her eyes shone.

''You'll—you'll justify his goodness, Bob?''

''And yours,'' said Tennant under his breath. ''So help me, God.''—British Weekly.

The Day's Work for Dr. Grenfell.

None but a resolute and powerful man could get through a routine like Grenfell's. His daily tasks in summer include treatment of ward cases received aboard his ship between hospital points; navigating of the steamer, for he is his own pilot; attention to all patients found in the different harbors or aboard the fishing vessels, such as diagnosing and dispensing for those ailing, abscess-letting, tooth-pulling, etc.; holding religious meetings every evening; responding to all calls at whatever hour, even when this implies landing in the inky blackness of night or rowing miles in an open boat where the ship can not get; writing a daily diary for a score of newspapers, to swell the funds; conducting Sunday services all the season round; arranging for supplies of wood for the ship's furnaces in a land where there is no coal; adjudicating the disputes between the fisher-folk as an unpaid magistrate; caring for orphans and lunatics; providing clothes and food for the ill-clad and destitute; wooden legs and arms for the crippled, shot-guns, and game traps for the ''furriers,'' and nets and gear for the fisher-folk who have met misfortune; hearkening to the appeal of everybody in distress, and relieving them so far as possible; baptizing, marrying and burying where no clergyman ever goes; towing off stranded vessels after every great storm, and carrying wrecked crews southward to the mailboat; sounding for reefs, exploring harbors, and discovering new codbanks for the trawlers, beside keeping track of the multitude of details and the finances incident to the administration of four hospitals and a ship, as well as all the subsidiary enterprises,—lending libraries, workshops, fox-farms, angora goat herds, farm at St. Anthony, sawmill at Roddickton, eight co-operative stores, and the reindeer herd; not to mention correspondence with institutions and friends in Europe and America. —From ''Grenfell of Labrador,'' by P. The Old Maid.

In the December ''American Magazine'' David Grayson, author of ''Adventures in Contentment,'' begins a new series entitled ''Some of My Neighbors.'' The first is on ''An Old Maid.'' Following is an extract:

''What a triumph, then, is every fine old man! To have come out of a long life with a spirit still sunny, is not that an heroic accomplishment?

''Of the real life of our friend I know only one thing; but that thing is precious to me, for it gives me a glimpse of the far dim Alps that rise out of the Plains of Contentment. It is nothing very definite—such things never are; and yet I like to think of it when I see her treading the useful round of her simple life. As I said, she has lived here in this neighborhood—oh, sixty years. The country knew her father before her. Out of that past, through the dimming eyes of the old inhabitants, I have had glimpses of the sprightly girlhood which our friend must have enjoyed. There is even a confused story of a wooer (how people try to account for every old maid!)—a long time ago—who came and went away again. No one remembers much about him—such things are not important, of course, after so many years——

''But I must get to the thing I treasure. One day Harriet called at the little house. It was in summer and the door stood open; she presumed on the privilege of friendship and walked straight in. There she saw, sitting at the table, her head on her arm in a curious girlish abandon unlike the prim Miss Aiken we knew so well, our Old Maid. When she heard Harriet's step she started up with breath quickly indrawn. There were tears in her eyes. Something in her hand she concealed in the folds of her skirt; then impulsively—unlike her, too—she threw an arm around Harriet and buried her face on Harriet's shoulder. In response to Harriet's question she said:

'''Oh, an old, old trouble. No new trouble.'

''That was all there was to it. All the new troubles were the troubles of other people. You may say this isn't much of a clue; well, it isn't, and yet I like to have it in mind. It gives me somehow the other woman who is not expected or predictable or commonplace. I seem to understand our Old Maid the better; and when I think of her bustling, inquisitive, helpful, gentle ways and the shine of her white soul, I'm sure I don't know what we should do without her in this community."

A New Poem by Edwin Markham.

Edwin Markham, who made a world-wide reputation a few years ago with his poem, "The Man With the Hoe," has written for the Christmas Woman's Home Companion a poem that is considered to be even greater than "The Man With the Hoe." Many who have read Markham's new poem, "Before the Gospels Were," consider it the greatest verse of recent years. "Before the Gospels Were" tells, with wonderful poetic imagination, the story of the gathering together of the materials for the gospels by Christ's disciples after his ascension. The opening verse of the poem is:

Long noons and evenings after He was gone,
Mary the Mother, Matthew, Luke and John,
And all those who loved Him to the last,
Went over all the marvel of the past—
Went over all the old familiar ways
With tender talk of dear remembered days.
They walked the roads that never gave Him rest—
Past Jordan's ford, past Kedron's bridge,
Up Olivet, up Hermon's ridge,
To that last road, the one they loved the best.

The climax of the poem is reached in the last verse, which sums up all the thoughts that have been expressed in the preceding lines:

So huddling often by the chimney blaze,
Or going down the old remembered ways
On many a lingering walk,
They held their wonder-talk,
Minding each other of some sacred spot,
Minding each other of a word forgot;
So gathering up till all the whispered words
Went to the four winds like a flight of birds!

A Season of Feasting.

All the spirit of Christmas cheer is in Jacob A. Riis's "Yule-tide in the Old Town," the Christmas "Century's" opening article. It includes a picture of Yule-tide feasting:

When we were not dancing or playing games, we literally ate our way through the two holiday weeks. Pastry by the mile did we eat, and general indigestion brooded over the town when it emerged into the white light of the new year. At any rate, it ought to have done so. It is a prime article of faith with the Danes to this day that for any one to go out of a friend's house, or of anybody's house, in the Christmas season without partaking of its cheer, is to "bear away their Yule," which no one must do on any account. Every house was a bakery from the middle of December until Christmas eve, and oh! the quantities of cake we ate, and such cakes! We were sixteen normally in our home, and mother mixed the dough for her cakes in a veritable horse trough kept for that exclusive purpose. As much as a sack of flour went in, I guess, and gallons of molasses, and whatever else went to the mixing. For weeks there had been long and anxious speculations as to "what father would do," and gloomy conferences between him and mother over the state of the family pocketbook, which was never plethoric; but at last the joyful message ran through the house from attic to kitchen that the appropriation had been made, "even for citron," which meant throwing all care to the winds. The thrill of it, when we children stood by and saw the generous avalanche going into the trough! What would not come of it!

The whole family turned to and helped make the cakes and cut the "pepper nuts," which were little squares of cake dough we played cards for and stuffed our pockets with, gnashing them incessantly. Talk about eating between meals; ours was a continuous performance for two solid weeks. The pepper nuts were the real staple of Christmas to us children. We rolled the dough in long strings like slender eels and then cut it a little on the bias. They were good, those nuts, when baked brown. I wish I had some now.

It all stood for the universal desire that in the joyous season everybody be made glad. I know that in the Old Town no one went hungry or cold during the holidays, if indeed any one ever did. Every one gave of what he had, and no one was afraid of pauperizing anybody by his gifts, for they were given gladly and in love, and that makes all the difference—did then and does now. At Christmas it is perfectly safe to let our scientific principles go and just remember the Lord's command that we love one another. I subscribe to all the scientific principles of giving with perfect loyalty, and try to practice them till Christmas week comes in with its holly and the smell of balsam and fir, and the memories of childhood in the Old Town; then—well, anyway, it's only a little while. New Year's and the long cold winter comes soon enough.

Our People's Greatest Need is the Ideal Home.

The most important gift I could bestow upon the country, had I the power, would be an ideal American home. It would be the home of peace and harmony, says Bishop Samuel Fallows in a symposium, "If I Were a National Santa Claus," in the December Delineator. The husband would never play the part of a tyrant, nor the wife the part of a scold. The household quiver would be full of happy children who would ever see in the companionable, provident father and the wise and loving mother the perfection of marital love. The beauty of holiness would fill the domestic sanctuary. The incense of prayer and praise would daily ascend to heaven from the family altar. Love as law and law as love would bind every member to all the duties of life.

It would be a home of plenty. No wolf of poverty would ever look in at the door. The husband, the houseband, would earn an ample income by honest effort. The wife, the distributor, would make all the household expenditures on a just yet generous basis. Children would meet no need to go out prematurely to toil for the common subsistence, and miss all the play and sport to which early youth is entitled.

Thus love conjugal, love filial, love fraternal, united with neighbor loves and civic, sanctified and glorified by the love of God, would give a sheaf of graces and virtues before which all other sheaves known to man would bow.

If this gift were bestowed and realized it can easily be seen how widespread the beneficial effects would be. The realization of such a home would mean the solution of the labor problem. No unnecessary burden would be placed by capital upon the laborer's shoulders, whatever the kind of service required. It would mean "live and let live." Mammon would not trample manhood beneath its feet. Such a home would send children to school with every fundamental law of deference to authority ingrained in their natures.

In society these well-taught youths would go, and obedience to law would be as natural as the inbreathing of the vital air.

And with this gift the foul fiend of divorce would cease to blast with the breath of the bottomless pit the fairest flowers of the home paradise.

MASON & HAMLIN CO.:—
I have used one of your Liszt Organs almost continuously for the past six months, and I find that it pleases me better and better the more I use it. Its wonderful variety of tone-color, its capacity for expression, especially in "cantabile" effects, and above all, its perfect intonation, combine to render it a most delightful home instrument, while the extreme delicacy of some of its effects surpass those of any other instrument. Combined with the pianoforte or strings, or as an accompaniment to the voice, it almost rivals the orchestra in variety of combinations. Appealing, as it does, to a cultivated musical taste, it cannot fail to become a favorite with musical people generally.

You'll find the Whaggledak at home, consuming

Late, late at night poor Teddy Bear comes

ACCORDING TO ST. MARK

By Mary H. Grosvenor.

"I really think you are a little hard on your namesake." Mrs. McLane's tone was slightly aggrieved, and there was not quite as pleasant an expression as usual upon her comely face.

"I am sure I do not mean to be." This voice was as quiet as the other had been perturbed. "It seems to me had I praised her more, it would have been too much for even a mother to swallow."

"Oh! I know you said she was well-grown and well-mannered and good looking, far beyond what you had expected in two years, and yet underneath all there was a 'but'—and that 'but' does away with all your commendation."

"What keen ears you mothers have! I was hardly conscious of that 'but.'"

"It was there all the same, in italics if not in capitals. Now do tell me what you mean."

"My dear girl," said Miss Egerton, "remember I have only been at home a week, and after leaving Dorothy a child, I feel the necessity of renewing my acquaintance with a young woman of fifteen, who almost looks over my head."

"But you are not answering my question," persisted Mrs. McLane. "I hope you did not learn evasion in Germany."

"I hope not, indeed," and with a slightly quizzical smile, Miss Egerton bent lower over her embroidery.

"You think her disobedient?" Mrs. McLane walked to the window and laid one hand upon her sister's shoulder.

Miss Egerton did not reply, but her own hand clasped her sister's.

"I don't think she means to be," Mrs. McLane continued. "And, after all, she does what is asked for in the end."

"That is perhaps where my 'but' came in," Miss Egerton said, slowly. "She needs to learn obedience according to Saint Mark."

"What do you mean? You are so mysterious!"

"I will explain the mystery to Dorothy some day."

"She is quite as good in that respect as the rest of the girls." Mrs. McLane had assumed the defensive.

"But when one loves a child as we do Dorothy," the quiet voice replied, "we want her to be better than the rest of the girls."

Down below in the street a tall girl looked up from a group of her companions and waved a greeting to the two in the window. In a short time her swift step was heard on the stairs, and Dorothy, with roses in her cheeks, brown eyes dancing with health and merriment, and sunny hair tossed this way and that by the boisterous wind! She gave each an impetuous, breathless hug, talking rapidly in spite of gasps:

"Oh, Aunt Dolly, it is good to know you are here! I was thinking about it all day. And it eases my conscience, too," with a laugh. "If I knew mother was alone, I would not like to leave her, as I am going to now, and run off to spend the afternoon with Anna Clare."

"Is not that rather a poor way to show your pleasure at my being here?"

"As if you two would miss me when you have those years to talk over and catch up with! So I'll say good-bye to you, and leave you to discuss German housekeeping."

"But, Dorothy, do not forget your hour for music," said her mother, a little anxiously. "You should be at the piano now, and your father told you to prepare some manuscript for him."

"So he did," Dorothy answered, lightly, "and I will do it when I come home." And away she went without giving her mother time for expostulation.

"I am afraid her father will be seriously offended if Dorothy neglects this paper. The last time he came as near giving her a scolding as John ever can. She does the typewriting so accurately, she is of the greatest service to him when she is prompt."

Mrs. McLane gave a little sigh, and her sister felt tempted to echo it, but wisely repressed the inclination, and gave herself once more to her embroidery.

The next afternoon, as Miss Egerton sat in the twilight by the open fire, the door opened and Dorothy came bouncing into the room with her usual impetuosity.

"Aunt Dolly," she said, "how nice to find you alone! Mamma has a flock of visitors downstairs, and I was afraid you would be helping to receive them."

"I had a bit of a headache, my dear, and your mother excused me to the visitors, and I have had my cup of tea in here in a very lazy fashion."

"Oh!" disappointment in the long drawn-out exclamation; "then you want to be quiet, and I am just aching to talk!"

Miss Egerton laughed.

"Sit down, dear; there is another low chair for you. I am quite ready to talk."

"Are you sure, Aunt Dolly? I don't want to be selfish about it."

"I am quite sure, so let me relieve you of that aching as soon as possible."

"Aunt Dolly," the girl commenced, impetuously, "mother says you don't approve of me."

"Did she put it exactly in that way?"

"Well, perhaps not. She told me a great many nice things you said about me, but—she said there was a 'but,' and I want to know what it stands for."

"Have you not the least idea, Dorothy?"

The honest eyes met her aunt's squarely.

"Perhaps I have deep down in my heart," said Dorothy, slowly, with reddening cheeks.

"Well?"

"You think me procrastinating."

Miss Egerton was silent.

"And sometimes disobedient?"

No answer.

"But, Aunt Dolly," said the girl pleadingly, "I always mean to do as I am told, and I do, too, after a while."

Miss Egerton smiled.

"Aunt Dolly, don't be dumb any longer. Mother says you want me to learn some sort of obedience. What sort do I need?"

"I said you should learn obedience according to Saint Mark."

Dorothy stared. "What do you mean? I don't remember that he was any more obedient than the others."

"Suppose you light the lamp and get my Bible from the stand. There is half an hour still before dinner, and in that time I think I can make you understand what sort of obedience this is."

When Dorothy returned to her place, Bible in hand, Miss Egerton said: "Open to the first chapter of Mark and the eighteenth verse."

"'And straightway they forsook their nets,'" Dorothy read, wonderingly.

"Now the second chapter and twelfth verse."

"'And immediately he arose.'"

"The same word as 'straightway,' Dorothy," said her aunt. "Now the fifth chapter and forty-second verse."

"'And straightway the damsel arose.'"

"The sixth chapter and forty-fifth verse."

"'And straightway—'" the girl began; "Aunt Dolly, are there many more?"

"A great many more. But, my dear girl, are not these enough to help you understand what I mean by obedience according to Saint Mark?"

Dorothy was silent for some minutes and her answer, when it came, was very gently spoken.

"Aunt Dolly, 'straightway' obedience. That was better than twenty scoldings. Think of my delayed obedience and all the trouble it causes! In two days I have worried father about his paper, and neglected mother's errands, and mailed your letter when I was ready, too late to reach your friend before she started for Europe. I wish I could be 'straightway' obedient, but how am I to remember?"

For answer, Miss Egerton put into her hand a copy of the Gospel of Saint Mark. "I would read it carefully, if I were you; and you must not be discouraged."—Youth's Companion.

UNCLE NED'S HELP BOX.

"Tom found wheeling in the pile of wood one of the hard things!"

"It takes so long!" he fretfully exclaimed. "I'll never get done. Grandpa always makes me do the hard things!"

Uncle Ned was on the veranda, hidden away behind the woodbine. It had been less than three days since the beginning of his visit, and already in that time he had discovered Tom's failing—the "general," grandma called it, since this one was so much more noticeable than any other.

"He makes mountains of ant-hills," and Uncle Ned smiled to himself, as he peered through the green vines before him.

He thought for a moment.

"I wonder if my old 'help box' wouldn't be good for Tom—or one just like it. I remember how it aided me. I believe I'll try it," and Uncle Ned went quickly into the house.

"Got a box, mother—about this size?" and Uncle Ned measured with his two hands.

"Why, yes. I shouldn't wonder—want it now?"

"If it's handy. I don't want to make you any trouble."

"No trouble in the world," briskly, and Mrs. Newcomb pulled out a long, deep drawer from the hall closet.

"This'll do!" Uncle Ned took up a small white box. "It's just what I want—not too large."

Uncle Ned carried it to his room, where he remained for nearly two hours.

"There!" when it was finished; "I guess that is as good a 'help box' as the one I had. Now if it does as much for Tom as mine did for me, 'magic helper,' wouldn't be a bad name for it."

Tom was still wheeling in the wood from the slowly diminishing pile when Uncle Ned once more returned to the veranda.

"I'll never get it done—never!" The voice was full of impatient discouragement.

"Want some help, Tom?" called Uncle Ned.

Tom looked up abashed.

"Why, yes; but you'd better not come—perhaps grandpa might not"—

"Oh, he won't mind—not this kind of help!"

Tom eyed the box Uncle Ned carried, suspiciously.

"This is the help."

"That? That's only a box!" Tom looked incredulous.

"But it's a 'help box'—you'll see!" Uncle Ned mysteriously took off one of the bands.

"Help box!" Still Tom was not convinced.

Uncle Ned smiled—one of the "silent kind"—at Tom's puzzled face.

"I'm going to leave it here—you may keep it," explained Uncle Ned. "It's full of magic helpers, and when you have anything hard to do, open it and take out one. After I go back into the house take out No. 1!"

"Thank—you! I hope 'twill help me get in this pile of wood."

"It will—see if it doesn't."

After Uncle Ned had gone, Tom shyly took off the cover from the little white "help box."

"They're only cards," disappointedly. But he took out one "according to directions," and read it: "Remember, it's only one stick at a time."

"I don't see how you're going to help much."

But it did, for it showed Tom that he didn't have to wheel in the whole pile at once. And one stick at a time wasn't hard—there couldn't be anything easier.

The next day grandpa asked Tom to weed the onion bed—'twas just a small one.

"Oh, dear!" and Tom sighed gloomily.

"Perhaps the 'help box'"—'Twas Uncle Ned's suggestion.

Tom opened it after he reached the garden, and took out Help 2: "A laugh makes all things easy."

At the thought of the curious little helper Tom laughed in spite of himself, and he was cheerful till the job was done. Weeding didn't seem "a bit hard!"

"I guess they do help," concluded Tom.

The afternoon before baking day grandma asked Tom to fill up the big wood-box, as she would be obliged to keep a fire nearly all day. Tom was just starting fishing.

Two little "put-off" puckers began to gather on the troubled forehead.

"Can't I wait until"—then he ran for Help 3, "Duty first; fun afterwards."

"That's the best way," agreed Tom with the little helper. "I'd be thinking all the time of having it to do—'twould spoil just half the fun!"

When Help 4 was needed 'twas ready: "Attack in parts."

"It's most like No. 1," thought Tom.

"But 'twouldn't hurt if 'twas No. 1 over again—it's such a splendid helper!"

Help 5 whisked Tom's Saturday chores away in half the time it usually took him to do them: "A thing begun is quite half done."

And Tom was so apt to put off his work, he dreaded it so!

"Well, how's the 'help box' aiding?" asked Uncle Ned. 'Twas two weeks after Tom had received it.

"Just great! Things aren't half so hard to do—not when you've magic helpers!"—Albert C. Caldwell, in Zion's Herald.

A CHRISTMAS SUGGESTION.

To Our Subscribers,

Dear Friends:—

A merry Christmas to one and all, and may the Lord graciously spare you to see many happy returns of the day.

There remains just one more week in which we may write the figure "1908," and then we must enter upon a new year, which I sincerely hope will be filled with happiness and prosperity to every one of our subscribers, and all who may come into the Christian-Evangelist family circle during the coming year.

There is just one supreme desire, in so far as the interests of this paper are concerned, that I have upon my mind and heart at this writing, and that is, that every subscriber who has enjoyed the visits of The Christian-Evangelist during this year, will send us a Christmas present, in the form of a $1.00 bill accompanied by four new subscriptions, to run during the first three months of the new year. In return, we will give to our subscribers the very best religious paper possible to produce from this office, which has, for over forty years, given to the brotherhood a staunch and true advocate of New Testament Christianity.

Believing, as we do, in the loyalty of our patrons and subscribers, we will confidently expect, during the remaining few days of this year, a generous response to this "Christmas suggestion."

Sincerely yours,

W. Daviess Pittman

17,000 Preachers.

What a world of good they could do! Everywhere there is a lack of ministers. With this thought there comes to us a striking comparison. The United States is sending around the world a great fleet of war vessels. Mr. Charles E. Beals has been figuring the cost of this expedition, and he works it out that the same money would pay the combined salaries of 17,000 ministers of the gospel for one year. There may be differences of opinion as to which will be the more effective force in keeping the peace of the world—the navy or the preachers. But there can be no manner of doubt as to which is the more valuable servant for one year to the people of the United States.

Dignity and Service.

The average American values service more highly than dignity. That is why Mr. Roosevelt has been the most popular president. Many a man may dislike, personally, the noise his big stick makes, but when the strike smashes some evil or the brandishing throws consternation into the ranks of smug laissez-faire men, the personal distaste for any lack of dignity counts but little against the satisfaction that comes from the feeling that the President has at heart, though he may sometimes make mistakes, the real welfare of the whole people, irrespective of party or rank. Senators and congressmen are now much excited. They feel insulted because the President has intimated that certain congressmen do not wish to be investigated by secret service men. If we mistake not, the people are with the President. He himself is subject to criticism, and it is bestowed freely. He can even be investigated and later impeached. Have all senators and congressmen been immaculate? The very fact that they have taken so seriously the President's words will create a suspicion that has not been prevalent in the minds of the people, though they are conversant with such cases as Burton, Hermann and Mitchell. The people respect dignity, but they do not care a fig for dignity that is a cloak for carelessness about public civic honesty. They are impressed with the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is honest, though they may be opposed to his party policies. And there is a growing conviction that honest nation-service in public life is of far more weighty consideration than a formal respect for party ties or choice diction in silk-hat-broadcloth dignity.

Government by Commission.

One of the most impressive indorsements of a municipal administration is that which was tendered the mayor and commissioners of the city of Dallas, Texas, last week, when there were presented to them petitions from nearly three-fourths of the qualified voters, urging them to become candidates for re-election to their present positions, and promising them support. The meaning of such action is equivalent to the bestowal of the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and the Dallas commissioners deserve the praise. Since party rule has been abolished and the commission form of government by independent citizens adopted, nearly two years ago, there has been a great change for the better in civic administration. The public service has been improved, public funds wisely handled, and a business-like administration carried on in the interests of the people. And the people are appreciative. Mayor Hay and his co-workers have stood out against graft and greed, and have worked for the citizens as a whole. They have demonstrated that the commission form of government can be made the best form of government.

Freedom of the Press.

The severe excoriations by the President of the Indianapolis News and the New York World for publishing gross and injurious misrepresentations concerning the action of the government in the purchase of the Panama Canal from the French, has been the occasion of wide and severe criticism on the President's utterances. There is a very general expression of regret that the President should have thought it necessary to indulge in such harsh epithets as he has in characterizing the course of these newspapers, and in this respect we think that a large majority of the friends of the President would find themselves in sympathy with the criticism. But many of the leading newspapers go farther, and especially condemn the President for that part of his message suggesting that legal proceedings for libel be brought against the New York World for its false and injurious statements. They plead for what they call the freedom of the press as a sacred right which must not be interfered with. The freedom of the press, however, is one thing and the abuse of that freedom is quite another thing. To argue that newspapers, as well as individuals, should not be held to a strict accountability for their scurrilous charges against the government or individuals, is contrary to the practice which prevails in all enlightened countries. It is safe to say that we have the most reckless and mendacious daily press in the civilized world, and public sentiment will indorse the position of the President, that those newspapers which manifest no regard for truth nor for justice, if only they may give publication to a sensational article, should be held responsible for their utterances, and treated as criminals.

Mr. Taft's Cabinet.

The cabinet makers have almost completed Mr. Taft's cabinet for him. He himself, however, has made only two selections thus far, namely, Senator Knox, of Pennsylvania, for Secretary of State, and Frank Hitchcock as Postmaster General. All the other reported appointments, or selections, are mere guesses, which Mr. Taft declares are uninspired by him. The President-elect has taken quarters in Augusta, Ga., where he will spend the winter, and where he is to be visited soon by Senator Knox, who will confer with him in reference to other members of the cabinet. Mr. Taft has made it clearly understood that he expects Congress, at its special session to be convened in March, to make a substantial reduction in the present tariff rates. The platform of the party promises as much to the people, and he holds that Congress can not do anything less than carry out the platform promise of the party and the wishes of the people. He classes himself with those who believe that excessive protection has done much to foster the trusts, which have become violators of the law.

Aerial Navigation.

The feat performed by Mr. Knabenshue in sailing around over the city of Los Angeles, one night recently, dropping bombs of confetti on the heads of the people, is a startling illustration of how his machine might be used in war for the destruction of a city or an army. Meanwhile the experiments of Mr. Wilbur Wright, now in France, are further demonstrating the practicability of aerial navigation. Mr. Frank Lahm, who is himself a pioneer American balloonist and aeroplanist, in a recent interview expresses himself in the following optimistic way concerning Mr. Wright's experiments:

"I have seen Mr. Wright go aloft without the aid of any propulsive weight. I have seen him parallel the earth no higher than a man's shoulder for miles. I have seen him come down in a spiral. I have seen him take up a man weighing 208 pounds. I am confident that the Wright machine has solved the problem of aerial navigation. It is now merely a matter of detail. He can even with his present machine do whatever he wishes within the limits of the fuel he is able to carry. I expect to see the Wright machine make a flight across the English channel and back before spring. I believe that even in France, which is five years ahead in aviation, it will be difficult for the most optimistic to realize the possibilities in store for the aeroplane commercially and from the viewpoint of men of war."

"A Merry Christmas!"

In the long circuit of the earth about the sun we come again to that period of the year in which the birth of our Savior is celebrated. As this season comes round we seem to hear, even yet, pulsating on the wintry air, the notes of that angelic refrain, "Peace on earth, good will among men." Surely no message was more needed at that time by our poor, sin-cursed and sorrowing world than that of peace and good will. True, no actual war prevailed at the time of Christ's birth, but the spirit of race-hatred, and of revenge, was rife among men, and a feeling of unrest and almost of despair pervaded the hearts of men. The world was sick, and no physician had been found who could heal its diseases. It was sinking steadily under the weight of its guilt and of its sorrow. Into such a world came the herald-angels on that first glad Christmas night, singing the Gloria in Excelsis, and announcing the birth of a Savior, who could heal all human maladies and bring peace and joy and good will to men.

It is the fact that the announcement of the angels has been made good, that gives significance to the event. We of this twentieth century know, far better than it was possible for the people of that time to know, the vast value to the world of the birth of Christ. We know how his coming in the flesh introduced a new era in the history of the world, and opened a new fountain of life for humanity's needs. Not that Christ's mission has yet been completely fulfilled; not that the world is what he died to make it; not that the ideals which he gave to men have as yet been realized in our race. But enough progress has been made to convince all honest and thoughtful minds that he who was cradled in a manger at Bethlehem, nineteen centuries ago, was the world's promised and expected Redeemer, and that his life and teaching and death and resurrection from the dead, and his beneficent reign, through his church, over mankind have been the cause of the upward trend in the life of man, the source of a better and brighter civilization, and the mainspring of the best hopes and aspirations of humanity to-day.

It is proper, therefore, that the Christmas season, associated with the birth of Christ, should be one of joy and gladness. It should not, however, be one of excesses, of reckless abandon, of unbridled gratification of the appetities, as is too often the case. Rather, it should be a time of pure family joys, of innocent amusement on the part of the young, and of reverent gladness on the part of all. Let us make it a glad and happy time for the children, while we seek, also, to bring a little sunshine into the lives of the aged, to whom the Christmas season calls up the memories of departed years, and who often sit by lonely firesides, from which have fled the gladness and joy of other days. Especially is it fitting that we remember the poor and neglected at this joyful season of the year, and seek to bring some brightness into hearts and homes where the shadows of poverty and want lie deepest and darkest. Such was the Christ spirit. Inasmuch as we do it unto one of the least of these, we have done it unto Him.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST extends its good wishes to all its readers, wishing them "a merry Christmas," and especially that joy that is doubled by being shared with others.

Is There a Final Revelation?

The Universalist Leader, of Boston, brushes aside as a mark of superstition "the idea that there was at any time, anywhere in the past, an original, final and complete revelation of any system of sacrifices, ceremonies, or ideas such as constitute an eternal revelation." This view, it says, "is discredited everywhere in Christian scholarship." It goes on to say "that if there was such a revelation it has itself been washed away by a flood." To quote once more from this champion of liberal religion: "In any brief survey of the history of religion in the world, we are forced to the conclusion that we know nothing of any original, complete revelation."

These extracts raise a very important, fundamental question. No one claims, of course, that the Old Testament contains a complete revelation of God, but that God does disclose himself and his will partially in the Old Testament, and to such a degree as the people were fitted to receive, is a contention of evangelical believers. But the contention of our Boston contemporary goes a great deal farther than this. It denies the completeness and finality of the revelation in Christ. It denies, in other words, what is affirmed in the Hebrew letter, that "God having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath, at the end of these days, spoken unto us in his Son, whom he appointed heir of all things, through whom also he made the worlds," and that this Son is "the effulgence of his glory, and the very image of his substance." It is a denial, furthermore, of Jesus' own words to Philip: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; how sayest thou, Show us the Father?" (John 14:9.)

Has any "flood" of modern criticism carried away the Christ, with his revelation of the Father and of the Father's will? Was Jesus Christ only a human teacher who, like all other religious teachers, have been outgrown and have become obsolete in their authority? Is He not "the same yesterday, to-day and forever?" Has the world discovered any flaw in his perfect character, or any defect in his teaching concerning God and human duty? Has it conceived of any ideal of moral and spiritual beauty, of perfect manhood and Godhood combined, that excels Jesus of Nazareth? Nay, more: Has not the gospel of Christ vindicated its power to regenerate and redeem human life and character, and to answer every need of human nature? Is he not still the Desire of nations and do not the Isles wait for his law?

It is not contended, of course, that God has no more truth to show to mankind, and that there are not yet unattained heights of knowledge yet before us. It is claimed, however, that in Jesus Christ we have a revelation of God, of man, and of man's relation and obligations to God, which no human progress can render obsolete, and no adverse criticism can overthrow. Whatever progress mankind may make in the knowledge of Christ and of spiritual truth, will come through that divine Guide and Comforter, whose coming into the world to dwell in the hearts of believers is the crowning glory of the revelation of Jesus Christ.

Yes, we have a "final and complete" revelation of God in Christ, who abides the same through all the changing years, and we may sing with confidence:

> "Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day,
> Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away,
> Change and decay in all around I see;
> O thou who changest not, abide with me!"

"Not in Word Only."

Beloved, if THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is rendering the royal service to the cause of religious reformation which you say it is rendering, it is not unreasonable to expect that your kind words of appreciation will be supplemented by deeds which harmonize therewith. It is, indeed, a critical time in our history, and if you think the leadership of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in these trying days is a valuable asset to our Cause, it is no more than right that you should make such an expression, both in word and in act, as will make manifest your conviction, and as will enable us far more effectively to fulfill the high obligations which we feel that we owe to the cause of Christian unity and New Testament Christianity. We do not pause here to mention the ways in which our friends can help us to meet the demands that are upon us, for a little reflection will reveal to any one how his sympathy and fellowship may be shown. Not in word only, brethren, but in deed and in truth, help us in rendering the best possible service to our Cause and to the cause of our common Christianity.

Notes and Comments

Christmas and cruel criminations do not harmonize. Let the Christ-child have the right of way.

Congress and the President might set us a better example than they are now doing, in the interest of "Peace on earth, good will among men."

Clouds of controversy pass away, but the solid rock of truth abides, and those who build their habitations thereon shall not be ashamed.

It is better to deal with principles than personalities in settling great questions. A battle for principle, once won, rarely has to be fought over again, at least in the same form. We shall have no more conflicts over the organ and the right to use missionary societies. A chicken once hatched can not be put back in its shell. Revolutions do not go backwards, nor do evolutions "march up the hill and then march down again."

Sooner or later in the life of every religious body the question of the limits of religious liberty has to be solved. It has often happened in the past that these conflicts produced divisions where the principle of unity was not recognized as fundamental. Such a conflict can not produce division among us without the most absurd inconsistency, for the chief aim of our movement is to promote unity by example and teaching, and that on the basis of unity in faith and liberty of opinion.

Once the question is clearly settled as to matters of faith in which there must be unity, and matters of opinion wherein there must be liberty, we shall enter upon a new era of peace and progress, and our institutions of learning will enjoy a period of prosperity which they have not hitherto known. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been pointing out the lines on which this settlement is to be reached by the exposition of its motto, "In Faith, unity; in Opinions and methods, liberty; in all things, charity."

We can always rely on the fact that the second sober thought of the people will assert itself. It is asserting itself now in this controversy through which we have been passing. There is not the slightest doubt that the motto of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, quoted above, as interpreted in our Symposium, is the solution of our problem, and there is no other. We must have unity of faith in Jesus Christ and his authority; we must have liberty of opinion and methods among those who are in Christ Jesus; and in all things we must have charity—or love, which is the cohesive power that unites in one body all who have Christ's spirit. The violation of that principle has precipitated the present controversy, and the recognition and practice of it is the only remedy.

After all, it is well, perhaps, that this question should have arisen for final settlement before our Centennial, seeing that the very document, whose publication a century ago we are to celebrate, offers to us the very principle by which we are solving the problem of Christian liberty within the bonds of unity. If we can go to Pittsburg loving one another and working together, in spite of our different points of view and differences of opinion, we shall have demonstrated to the world the practicability of our plea for union, and our progress in the years to follow will be by leaps and bounds.

The Word and Way (Baptist), of Kansas City, announces that the Methodists of Lexington, Ky., are building a church edifice to cost $50,000, in which there is to be a baptistery for the baptism of believers. This leads our Kansas City contemporary to announce that "the Methodists are heading for the Baptist procession because Christ leads the conquering hosts." But will The Word and Way favor the reception of these baptized Methodists, if they present themselves for membership in the Baptist churches? If not, what good is a Methodist baptistery, anyway?

"Why should there be a conflict between the scholar and the business man as regards Biblical views? The business man gives the scholar in other departments of study credit for honesty, ability, and expert opinion. Why, then, in religion and in Biblical matters, should the scholar be distrusted? Do our college men take special delight in ruining the faith of the young men and women entrusted to them? Is that the hypothesis of business men and of people generally, who are not familiar with the methods and problems of scholars? But our students understand us and are helped by us. That is a great consolation. Only yesterday I learned of another of my students who has decided for the mission field. Methods and matter of teaching that issue in such faith and heroism should not disturb the untutored majorities. The Disciples have thirteen student volunteers here in Columbia.

Columbia, Mo. W. J. Lhamon.

This brief note asks a pertinent question. There is a tendency on the part of too many to enter upon criticism seemingly because the critic does not or, often, is not able to understand the one criticised. Criticism is not to be ruled out, but it must not be unworthy. Young men are not volunteering in these days for the foreign field under the impulse of false teachers.

The Baptist Times, of London, tells of a student who, after he had yielded his life to Christ, entered upon a series of studies which engaged all his time and energy, and who confessed he was losing interest in the spiritual life. The Times says it knows of many similar instances. It suggests the true remedy, which is as follows:

"It is a truism that a student may ruin his health through exclusive attention to the culture of his mind. All admit that, and yet students seem blind to the graver dangers to which their spiritual manhood and womanhood are exposed. This disaster can only be avoided by some method of spiritual culture. So much time ought to be devoted every morning to Bible reading and prayer. Sundays ought to be kept free from all study and thought of study. I heard one of the most distinguished scholars of the day declare, a few weeks ago, that he attributed much of his success in life to the fact that he had fenced off his Sundays as days of worship and rest. I dare add that one hour ought to be spared in midweek for the prayer-meeting."

A correspondent in one of our contemporaries eloquently remarks as follows:

"You may take a shell from its wild and tumbling home in the ocean to a mountain's firm and rocky crest, and, listening to the winds that search its tiny caverns, you can hear the threnody of the seas that moan and groan as they unceasingly toil around the world."

What the brother is trying to say is, that a shell placed to the ear produces a roaring noise, more or less like the noise of the sea.

Referring to a gracious remark of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, wishing the Roman Catholics success "in so far as they are evangelistic, carrying the cross of Christ, its consolations and its power to the souls of men," the Western Watchman (Catholic), of this city, says:

"Our good friend would have us succeed; but he does not wish us supremacy. Supremacy would not satisfy us. We would have absolute monopoly of Christianity. Christ gave a mission to his apostles and their successors, and to nobody else. Those who do not gather with the Catholic church scatter; those who are not with the Catholic church are against Christ."

This is the real spirit of sectarianism, and it is the mother of all sects. "We are the people—and the only way to union is to join us." Happily the Roman church has almost a monopoly of this feeling to-day.

The Independent, commenting upon the birth of Christ, refers to the predictions sometimes made that Christ's claims are being discredited by modern science, and says:

"And yet, somehow, we observe that Jesus does not cease to hold the love and the worship of men. This may be an age of science, and it is true that we try all things and old faiths crumble. But yet the salvation which Christ taught spreads over the world. More men cling to him than ever before. Christianity is conquering the nations."

Quite true. Never in all the world did the personality of Christ loom up so high on the horizon of human thought as it does to-day. Never did the Man of Galilee exert so wide an influence over the life of mankind as he does to-day. Christianity is the world-conquering religion.

The Baptist World, of Louisville, says:

"The Journal and Messenger justifies its opposition to the Baptist World Alliance by the fact that Baptists all over the world are not at one in some important matters. That is true. We wish that all Baptists everywhere agreed with us about everything, but they do not. However, we do not decline to co-operate with them in various ways because of this divergence of views. We do not consider that we endorse the views of all Baptists because we co-operate with them."

Our Louisville contemporary is right. To refuse co-operation with our brethren who hold with us the common faith, because this co-operation would imply endorsement of their errors, is the height of absurdity, and would make all co-operation absolutely impossible. Even a man and his wife could not get on together under such a rule. Will the Baptist World substitute baptized believers for the word "Baptists" in the foregoing comment? If so, our right hand is extended.

Current Religious Thought

The Federal Council is not a union, but a federation. It is not a church judicatory. Neither is it an independent, irresponsible organization. It is a delegated body, its delegates being sent to it with proper credentials by more than thirty Protestant denominations, including all the strong denominations of the country.

It is not an organization for Christian union as opposed to denominationalism. A few in it may misinterpret its mission and strive for the obliteration of denominational lines, but the very first suggestion of this, a mere hint in a list of resolutions, met a prompt negative. Its purpose is not union, but unity. It is not antidenominational, but interdenominational.

It is not a supreme court having authority over the denominations. Its functions are advisory. It will not handle matters belonging exclusively to any denomination, but only matters of common interest.——Herald and Presbyter.

There is now in session in Philadelphia one of the most significant councils of modern times. The object of this Federal Council, represented by all denominations and attended by some of the most distinguished men of the country, is union for work.

The Council is to meet every four years. Its purpose is really co-operation. It is not an attempt to make all men think alike on questions of creed and polity. It does not endeavor to do away with denominations. It seeks to avoid the two great faults of Protestantism: "Overlapping and overlooking." The plan has been approved by two-thirds of the proposed constituent bodies, and upon that approval this first regular meeting has been called. Its possibilities are great.—The Baptist Commonwealth.

Is it not possible that now, in these very days, there is a new chapter being commenced in the heavenward march of Christendom? The worldling may not note it. The sodden, sleepy or heavyfooted Christian may disparage it. The priest and the Levite may pass it by. But is it not a fact that a new, wonderful, compelling movement is permeating our Christianity, somewhat as Gibbon showed that Christianity itself permeated and diffused itself through the Roman world? We may believe it. It is the conviction of many whose ears catch the heart-beat of the people, that there is a desire to get together in order, in concord, in mutuality, in sincere affection and unity of aim, to realize the Savior's prayer that His disciples may be one. If this be a fact, then the spirits of just men made perfect, saints, seers, martyrs, those who have had pain at the unhappy divisions among Christian believers, must from their places in the other world look with joy on the events of these days. * * *

It was not a small idea, this calling of a council of eighteen million Christians and fifty million adherents. The wayfaring man may not have observed it. The worldling may not have lifted his eyes to the passing vision. But the historic painter, could he have looked upon that gathering with the eye of faith, might have found a subject worthy to be placed alongside that of the Diet at Worms or that council at Jerusalem when Paul was commissioned to be a foreign missionary and the limits of Christian evangelism were made coincident with the limits of the globe.—Central Christian Advocate.

The Federal Council does not pose as a legislative body. Its purpose is simply to effect a combination for harmonious work in all problems outside of church doctrine and administration. It has long been recognized that there are many questions of moral and public interest, settlement and missionary work, in which all denominations can do better work by uniting and conferring than by acting alone. The council consequently becomes a great clearing house for the suggestion and interchange of methods and plans as well as a consolidation for concerted action. It acts through its standing committees, each one of which was given a place upon the program for a presentation of its previously prepared and carefully digested statement on the topics assigned. These included "Week Day Instruction in Religion;" "Interdenominational Organizations;" "Co-operation in Foreign Missions;" "State Federations;" "Local Federations;" "Organization and Development;" "The Maintenance of the Council;" "The Church and the Immigrant;" "The Church and Modern Industry;" "Home Missions;" "Temperance;" "Sunday Observance;" "Family Life;" "Religious Instruction in Higher Institutions;" "International Relations;" and "Religious Instruction Through the Sunday-school;" all printed and distributed in a 100-page paper covered book to the delegates, who thus had opportunity beforehand to read and digest the text of the questions to be presented for discussion.—Report in the Standard.

The object of the Federal Council of Churches which closed its session in Philadelphia last week was the consolidation of the forces of Christianity for more united and more effective Christian service. * * * As defined by the plan of Federation the fivefold object of the Council will be:

"1. To express the fellowship and catholic unity of the Christian Church.

"2. To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world.

"3. To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the churches.

"4. To secure a larger combined influence for the churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social conditions of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ to every relation of human life.

"5. To assist in the organization of local branches of the Federal Council to promote its aims in their communities."

To our mind the second paragraph in this list expresses the paramount object and the most desirable end in such a movement as this. Think what it would mean to have all the churches of the land united to promote temperance, to foster liberty, to oppose injustice, to expose and prevent civil and political corruption, to regulate divorce, to secure the welfare of capital and labor alike, to abate child labor and the social evil, to bring about the substitution of peace for war, to give its thought and conscience to the best solution of the immigration problem, the race question, and all the other social and moral questions that confront the country.—The Morning Star.

The "Federal Council" is simply an orderly and significant gathering of the representatives, duly elected or appointed, from the several denominations of churches united in it. Its territorial limits are indicated by the word America. The only creedal or doctrinal basis of union is found in the words "Churches of Christ," which simply indicate that its constituents hold to the essential deity of Christ. It is not legislative in its character, nor governmental in its functions, but is purely fraternal, informational, and inspirationally co operative in its work. It signalizes and voices the wide and marked unity of the churches in all that pertains to the great essentials. It is clearly and positively religious in the sense of religion being the life of God in men through Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, as contra-distinguished from creeds, theologies and politics. The points of division among the churches, which have been many times sadly prominent, are left out of consideration, for each church to attend to in the measure and after the method that it finds pleasing to itself.—The Examiner.

A tempting opportunity for flings at the Christian church by those who are outside is the fact that the church has long been so much at loggerheads within itself. And now it looks as though that opportunity were in a fair way to be withdrawn. An unprecedented blow was struck at divisions and rivalries in Christian activity by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America which came to a conclusion last week. A sketch of the church-uniting, world-saving conference was published in last week's issue of the Times. It is worth while to note here a few of the characteristic utterances of leading spirits of the conference: Dr. Roberts (Presbyterian): "This council should be the beginning of the thorough Christianization of our land." Dr. Levi Gilbert (Methodist): "If we could begin anew, we should do without our many denominations; now, in mission lands, they have a chance to start anew." Dr. Arthur S. Floyd (Episcopalian): "Let us all get together,—the whole Christian family, even the Greek and the Roman,—so that our King will come back to his own." Robert E. Speer (Presbyterian). "All friction is disloyalty to Christ, and all waste is disloyalty to the world." Dr. A. Vennema (Dutch Reformed). "This Council will make it unnecessary to organize any more undenominational societies." Professor E. A. Steiner (Congregationalist): "You ministers have learned Latin and Greek and Hebrew; now learn to say 'How do you do?' in Italian to that immigrant. Get away from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob of old, and become acquainted with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob of to-day."—S. S. Times.

"If we were to give the young preachers a word of advice, it would be, 'Be yourself.' Don't let the imitation of others make you juiceless—and useless. Parrots are pretty, but they never go and do anything much. 'Be yourself.' Don't be like that preacher of whom President Hyde said, 'He is dead the day he graduates.'"—Central Christian Advocate.

"It is time that the Jews of New York should realize that entertainments for charitable purposes are improper in themselves, even when the means resorted to are not offensive. Such affairs as the "charity bridge parties, which are so common—truly common—where ladies pay an entrance fee 'for charity's sake,' are most demoralizing. The relief of suffering is nothing less than a sacred duty, and should be done in that spirit and in that spirit alone."—American Hebrew.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The picture on our front page this week of the aged Simeon in the Temple holding the Christ-child in his arms, is a beautiful blending of age and childhood. There are in it the elements of memory and of hope, of joy and of pathos. Long has this venerable servant of God been waiting for the consolation of Israel. He had prayed that he might not see death until he had seen the Lord's Christ, and his prayer had been granted. Others might be unable to see in this Babe of Bethlehem the world's promised Redeemer, but this devout and righteous servant of God seems to have had no difficulty in identifying this child with the long-expected Messiah. Having been permitted to see him, he was willing to depart this life.

"Now lettest thou thy servant depart, Lord,
According to thy word, in peace;
For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,
Which thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples;
A light for revelation to the Gentiles,
And the glory of thy people Israel."

The mystery of these wonderful words is impressed on the face of the mother, who gazes fondly, and yet reverently, upon the face of her child. "A light for revelation to the Gentiles!" Here is the prophecy of a new dispensation which was no longer to be limited to a single nation, but was to include all peoples. This Babe was to be a revelation of God's grace and truth to all the peoples of the world. Simeon could not have known this had not the Holy Spirit revealed it unto him. There is pathos, too, in the presence of the two turtle doves which, according to a merciful provision of the Mosaic law, could, in the case of the poor, be substituted for the lamb. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich."

It is a blessed thing for one to be permitted to live long enough to see the realization of some long-cherished object in life. This blessing is not vouchsafed to all. Moses was permitted to view the Promised Land from Mount Nebo, but he was not permitted to enter into it with his people. Who has not some purpose in life, some worthy object, he would like to see accomplished before he goes hence? It is a matter of extreme gratification to the aged, who realize that their life-tasks are almost done, to see others coming upon the stage of action equipped to take their places and carry on the work. Simeon had, no doubt, pondered the Hebrew prophecies concerning the Coming One, and longed to see his advent into the world before his eyes closed in death. It was not his to see the child grown to manhood, teaching great lessons and performing mighty deeds, and finally giving his life for the salvation of the world; but he saw the child of prophecy, and he knew that God was fulfilling his promise, and that all would be well. It was not given to us to see the wonderful Christ-child, but we live in an age brightened by his presence, and in a world that is more and more acknowledging his sovereignty. There are, however, millions of human beings, living in what we call Christian lands, who have not yet caught Simeon's vision of Christ's greatness and glory, who even close their eyes to the light of that revelation which he brought to the Gentiles. Strange that this should be so. Part of the responsibility for this failure of so many to see the glory of Christ rests upn a divided church. "Is Christ divided?" Yea, his body has been dismembered by the spirit of strife which, happily in our day, is giving place to the spirit of unity and of brotherly love. God speed the day when a united church shall lift up the Christ of Simeon, until his glory shall fill the whole earth!

Did you say to-morrow is Christmas? Is it possible that another year has fled into the irrecoverable past since we lighted the Yule-log fire, decked the house with holly and mistletoe, and heard the joy-bells ringing in a merry Christmas? It is even so. To those of us who "are older grown and gray," there are other Christmases more vivid in our memories than that a year ago. At this magic season memory is busy with the past, and from out the misty depths of bygone years calls up forms and faces, scenes and associations, connected with the Christmas season of the long ago. Indeed, it is only the child, after all, that can have a real Christmas. There is something in the day, in its associations with the Christ-child, and the giving of gifts, that appeals strongly to the child's imagination. On Christmas Eve, and in the twilight of Christmas morning, the children live in fairyland, and heaven and earth get so close together that it is difficult for them to distinguish the one from the other. How many a man has longed again to look with childlike eyes, and feel with childlike heart, and believe in with childlike faith, the Christmas stories which his mother told him in childhood! All the purest and best things of life come to childhood faith. "Except ye be converted and become as little children," said the Master, "ye can in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." Those who would drive faith out of men's hearts and substitute knowledge therefor, and dissipate all mystery with the arc light of science, reducing the world to a dead level of commonplace things and events, are striking at the very sources of life's supremest joys, inspirations and splendid heroisms. To be converted and become as little children, is to come into that state of humility and docility which recognizes God in this world, and which feels the very air pulsating with his presence and power.

What can you give for Christmas? You can, at least, give a kind word; perhaps a gracious letter to some one who will hail it as a benediction. Perhaps you can kindle the fire on some desolate hearth, or bring back a smile to faces seamed with care and trouble. You can show friendship and appreciation. You can be a friend to the friendless. You can fill your own heart with Christmas joy, and let it become contagious. You can make it the occasion of entering more fully into the spirit of him who gave up the glory which he had with his Father, to be a missionary to the earth, with nowhere to lay his head. We can all use the Christmas season, if we will, for the cementing of home ties, for cultivating the bonds of friendship, and for manifesting the spirit of kindliness and helpfulness to all with whom we come in contact. If Christmas does not make us kinder to our fellowmen, more forgiving, more generous, more willing to sacrifice material gain for spiritual good; in a word, if it does not make us more Christ-like, it has not accomplished its highest purpose for us. In vain do we go with the Wise Men to the manger cradle at Bethlehem if we take with us no offering of love or devotion, no costly sacrifice to give to him who, "being rich for our sakes became poor." Of little worth will be our gifts to friends and loved ones, unless these gifts be sanctified by a love for him whose coming into the world has made all our joys and gifts possible. In all our giving, in all our joys, in all our entertainments with the children, let us not forget him whose birthday we celebrate.

At the time of the birth of our Savior the temple of Janus was closed, and universal peace prevailed. So let us hope that this anniversary of that great event will witness the closed doors of the modern temple of war, both civil and religious, and the universal prevalence of "Peace on earth, good will among men." If we could have it our way, we would have a snowfall on Christmas eve throughout all that region where the snow flies in winter, so that on Christmas morning the earth would be mantled in white, and every twig and shrub would bear its burden of pure crystals, so that all the defects of Nature would be covered with a blanket of crystalline whiteness and purity. There is something about the snow-covered earth that harmonizes well with our idea of what Christmas should be. The Christmases we carry with us in our memory from childhood days have a background of snow for the new boots and the new sleds! The earth never looks so much like fairyland as when the air is full of snowy crystals, and tree and shrub and grass have donned their beautiful robes of white. The Easy Chair can not promise a white Christmas to its readers, but it promises them a happy Christmas if they seek to enter into the spirit of the season, and think more about making others happy than about their own happiness. As our thoughts go back to the humble birthplace of Jesus, how natural to recall the beautiful lines of Phillips Brooks:

"O little town of Bethlehem,
How still we see thee lie!
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep
The silent stars go by.
Yet in thy dark streets shineth
The Everlasting Light;
The hopes and fears of all the years
Are met in thee to-night."

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

By Wayland Hoyt, DD. LL.D.

It is the oldest church in Christendom. Perhaps it was built as early as A. D. 330. You enter from the streets of Bethlehem, and pass along a majestic cave flanked by a double row of forty-four monolithic columns with Corinthian capitals.

At the eastern end of the church, by a marble stairway you descend into what is called the Chapel of the Nativity—a kind of cave or grotto, about forty feet long, twelve feet wide, ten feet high. Whatever original wideness this cave or grotto had, is now concealed by gleaming marble. On one side hang thirty-two lamps, perpetually burning. These cast their radiance upon a great silver star set in the marble pavement. About the star, in huge Mosaic letters, glow these words—"Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus Natus Est"—Here of the Virgin Mary Jesus Christ was born.

In that limestone country, caves, in the old time, frequently served for stables; do still in the modern time. It may be this was the very cave—stable in which Jesus was born. While of that you may not be certain, of this you may be sure—that you are in the town of the Great Birth—this Bethlehem. And of this you may be further sure—that that inscription: "Here of the Virgin Mary Jesus Christ Was Born," tells the immemorial faith of Christendom.

At this Christmas time, during which the heart of the world throbs with gladness because of the Great Birth—a legitimate question is—is the doctrine of the Virgin Birth of Jesus reasonable? Are there sufficient reasons to defend the doctrines, both from doubt and from attack? Is it still a truth we ought to hold to, and may reasonably hold to—this of the Virgin Birth of Jesus? Well, let us think together for a little.

Think of the Universality of Jesus.

One of the most fascinating places I ever stood was on that bridge of bats, spanning the sea-arm, called the Golden Horn, separating the more ancient Stamboul and the more modern portions of the city called Galata—Para in Constantinople. As many as a hundred thousand people cross that bridge in a single day between dawn and sunset. And what a motley, divided, various throng they are! —Armenians, Jews, Greeks, Turks, Persians, dwellers in China and in India, black Moor, brown Arab, alert Americans, pushing Englishmen, hideously veiled women—and all with the easily distinguished marks of feature, size, gait, gesture, speech, costume, setting such diverse look upon them all!

What a deep difference, every way, difference of race is! Hard sculpturing and separating is its difference. And you can not get over this feeling of race-difference; it clings to you whether you will or not.

I have personally no great admiration for Walt Whitman. But, now and then, there is a marvelous touch in him. In his poem, "The Answer," he is surely speaking of this Jesus—

"Then the mechanics take Him for a mechanic,
And the soldiers suppose Him to be a soldier,
and the sailors that He has followed the sea;
The authors take him for an author, and the artists for an artist;
And the laborers perceive that He would labor
with them and love them;
No matter what the work is, that He is the one to follow it or has followed it;
No matter what the nation, that He finds brothers and sisters there.
The English believe that He comes from their English stock,
A Jew to the Jew He seems, a Russ to the Russ, usual and near, removed from none.
A gentleman of his perfect blood acknowledges
His perfect blood.
The insulter, the prostitute, the angry person, the beggar, see themselves in the ways of Him, He strangely transmutes them.
They are not vile any more; they hardly know themselves, they are so grown."

The One Person, to whom all those race-divided multitudes, crossing that bridge over the Golden Horn, may unite themselves, and in whom they may cohere; the One Person with whom all the peoples of all the kinds and of all the climes may surely find themselves in closest kin, is this Universal Jesus. Estimate, if you can, the startling, unique, world-binding power of this Universality!

Think of the sinlessness of this Jesus. I met this in my Bible-reading—"And David's heart smote him after that he had numbered the people." Why this numbering of people lay so weighty and sinfully upon David's heart I do not know; but manifestly it did. A distinguished writer has an essay he entitles, "The Moment After." "Then David's heart smote him after that he had numbered the people." Who does not know the meaning and the feeling of that "Moment After"? You remember how Lord Byron sings, how nothing

"Can exercise
From out the unbounded spirit, the quick sense
Of its own sins, wrongs, sufferance, and revenge
Upon itself; there is no future pang
Can deal that justice on the self-condemned
He deals on his own soul."

But this Jesus never had experience of this incriminating "moment after." No regret, no remorse, no consciousness of mistake even, is to be found in Jesus. This is his surprising, and even awful challenge, but one borne out by the flawless life—"Which of you convinceth me of sin?"

Think of the claims of Jesus. This is the ancient demand of Jehovah—"Thou shalt have no other gods before me; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them." Jesus knew of this divine demand of lonely supremacy in love, worship, service, for the Old Testament was his Bible, and he was saturated with it. But this Jesus claims that himself and the Father are one; that all men are to honor him, even as they honor the Father; that sight of him is sight of the Father; and when St. Thomas adores him as his Lord and God, then Jesus deserves such supreme worship as his own right, and without rebuke. What are we to say of such vast and overlapping claims of this Jesus? If they were not rightfully his own claims, then Jesus is inculcating idolatry. For myself, I know no way of escaping from the old, tremendous dilemma—"Aut Deus, aut non bonus"—Either God or not good. But Jesus is the highest ideal and illustration of the most shining goodness. Therefore, he is Deity, and has the right to make even such stupendous claims.

Think of the teachings of Jesus. Think of the sweep of the world onward in all sorts of explorations, discoveries, various masteries—old ideas discarded, new ideas accepted. But amid this mighty onward advance and change, what remains? The teachings of this Jesus remain. The teachings of Jesus are the ideal toward which the world struggles; and the world swings into the better sunlight in just the proportion in which it submits to and makes actual what this Jesus taught.

Now, how are you going to account for this Jesus?

By a merely human heredity? But Jesus was a member of the most separate and sectarian of peoples.

By environment? Standing amid the fair and various beauties of the birthplace of Robert Burns, one exclaimed: "No wonder Robert Burns was poet!" But another answered: "Sir, since Robert Burns, hundreds of men have been born into this environment, but not one of them was poet." Environment can not completely explain a poet, much less can his environment—narrow, pedantic, Gentile-hating—explain Jesus.

Or, will you account for this Jesus as some attempt by the assertion that he was the "God-filled man, but man only"; the child by natural generation of Joseph and of Mary? But how was it, that born only thus, of all the men that ever were, he alone became the "God-filled" man?

No, all such attempted accountings for this Jesus are halting and helpless.

What is the only true and possible accounting for him? This: "And the angel answered and said unto her, the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that Holy Thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God"; this, the descent of Deity into humanity; actual and veritable incarnation; and, as belongs to such abysmal stoop of Deity, by the virgin birth!

"The very God! think Abib; dost thou think?
So, the All-Great, even the All-loving, too—
So, through the thunder comes a human voice,
Saying, 'O heart, I made, a heart beats here!
Face, My hands fashioned, see it in Myself!
Thou hast no power, nor may'st conceive of Mine;
But love I gave thee, with Myself to love,
And thou must love Me who have died for thee.'"

And the fitting prelude to such life and love and atoning death was the actual virgin birth of the God-man. You scatter, in time you surely annihilate, all the high adorning joy of the Christmastime if you withhold your faith from the veritable fact of the virgin birth. Jesus must be utterly inexplicable to you if you refuse that. Really, refusing the virgin birth, you have no right to Christmas; its deep meaning has departed for you.

The Coronation of Childhood A Christmas Sermon

"And they came with haste, and found both Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in the manger.

"And when they saw it, they made known concerning the saying which was spoken to them about this child."—Luke 2:16, 17.

"And they were bringing unto him little children, that he should touch them: and the disciples rebuked them.

"But when Jesus saw it, he was moved with indignation and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me; forbid them not; for to such belongeth the kingdom of God.

"Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall in no wise enter therein.

"And he took them in his arms, and blessed them, laying his hands upon them."—Mark 10:13-17.

By Edgar DeWitt Jones

Again we come to the most joyous season of the year. The streets of our city have been ablaze with light. Shop windows are still splendid in holiday attire. Little eyes have been sparkling with anticipation, little brains have been conjuring up visions of trumpet and drum. Christmas eve thousands of little folks will hang up their stockings and then trudge off to bed, only to lie twisting and turning, wondering if morning will ever dawn.

Christmas, the anniversary of our Savior's birth, is here, and the lines of the old hymn seem very appropriate:

"Joy to the world, the Lord is come,
Let earth receive her king,
Let every heart prepare him room
And heaven and nature sing."

It is next to impossible to think of Christmas without thinking of children. To whom does it mean so much? Was there ever a time in our lives when this earth seemed more heavenly than in those days when we believed there was a person whose sole business was to harness up his reindeer once a year and make a journey of the globe, distributing presents to all good boys and girls? It is at this season of the year that even the more mature heart yearns for childish innocence and cries:

"Backward, turn backward, O time, in your flight,
And make me a child again just for to-night."

While the laughter and song of happy children is making Christmas music in our ears, let us consider the debt of childhood to Christianity. The little child has not always been an object of tender affection. In the pagan home, the children had no rights which the parents were bound to respect. The father's authority was supreme. He was a law to himself in the household. He might either kill or abandon his children if he did not care to be bothered with their rearing. Whoever found a deserted child might keep it for a slave. If children in the pagan home were beautiful and handsome, it was well; but if they were puny, or deformed, or unattractive, their lot was very sad. We are indebted to the classics for many beautiful lines, but it is difficult to find anywhere in them so much as a single sentence bearing on the sanctity of childhood.

In the Jewish home the child was sacred. Both father and mother were under obligations to the little ones. Child murder was not permitted. The life of a little child was as sacred as the life of a high priest. The presence of a large number of children in the Jewish home was regarded as a token of divine favor. The story of Samuel is a noteworthy example of the sacred devotion of a Jewish mother to her child. The Jews were commanded to teach their children concerning Jehovah, and were required to rear them in his fear. But it was not till the coming of our Savior that the coronation of childhood took place. God's great gift to the world was first a babe. It is good to see in the record of Jesus' life the place he gave to childhood, our obligations to it.

That was a great day in Jesus' life when the mothers came bringing their children to him that he might bless them. The disciples considered it an imposition, and were sending the mothers away. But when Jesus saw it he was moved with indignation [this was one of the few times of Jesus' indignation of which we have any record], and he said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." With powerful pathos the incident has been put in quaint dialect verse, entitled:

"THE MAISTER AND THE BAIRNS."

"The Maister sat in a wee cot house,
Tae the Jordan's watters near,
And the fisherfolk crush'd an' croodet roon
The Maister's words tae hear.

"An' even the bairns frae near-han streets
Kept mixin' in wi' the throng,
Laddies and Lassies wi wee bare feet
Jinkin' the crood amang.

"An ane o' the twal' at the Maister's side,
Kos' up and cried alood,
Come, come, bairns, this is nae place for you,
Run awa' hame oot o' the crood.

"But the Maister said, as they turned tae to go
Let the wee bairns come taw me,
An' he gathert them roon Him whaur he sat
An' lifted ane up on his knee.

"Aye, He gaithert them roon Him whaur He sat,
An' He straiket their curly hair
An' He said to the murmerin' fisherfolk
Who croodet aroon Him there:

"'Send na the weans awa' frae me,
And raither this lesson learn,
That nane'll win at heaven's gate
Who is na purr's a bairn.'

"An' he that has taen us for kith and kin,
Tho' a Prince o' the far awa',
Gaithert them roon Him whaur he sat
An' blisset them ane an' a'."

In this incident, Jesus teaches the church that there is no more important ministry than that of ministering to the children. A church may spend much on its music, its pulpit, its building, but if it neglects to feed the lambs it has become but a clanging cymbal.

Again, one day the disciples got into a heated argument as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Jesus took a little child and setting him in their midst, said: "Except you repent and become as this little child you can in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." "And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me." When a baby comes into a home, glory trails with it The homes where babies are are close to heaven. As Wordsworth has it:

"Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The soul that rises with us, our life's star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting,
And cometh from afar;
Not in entire forgetfulness,
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God, who is our home."

Jesus sanctified childhood. He honored it. He taught that we are under great and far-reaching obligations to the little people. The blessed influence set in motion by our Lord is still going on and reaching out and blessing the world. It took possession of Lord Shaftsbury and led him to leave his palatial home and spend the night searching the slums of London for the waifs, that they might be taken to a place where they would be tenderly cared for. It animated Gladstone to visit the little crossing-sweeper in his lonely garret home. It inspired Muller and Robert Raikes to minister to the lowly children and put them on the way to righteousness and peace. It led our own Mr. George to establish George's Junior Republic, where the street waifs of New York might have opportunities to rise in the world. This mind of the Master was in Dickens when he wrote "Oliver Twist" and other books. It was in Tennyson, and it led Mrs. Browning to write "The Cry of the Children." God honors those who are ministering to the children. There is an old legend which illustrates the honor in which teachers of children are held in heaven:

"There had been a great drought—no rain for many months. The fields were parched, the springs were dry, and there was distress everywhere. The people came together to pray for rain. Rabbis and great men prayed, but no rain came. Prophets and rulers prayed, but the sky remained cloudless. At last came a quiet, plain, unknown man, and he offered prayer. At once clouds began to gather and soon rain was falling. The people asked him who he was, and he answered, "I am a teacher of little children." The teacher of the children prevailed in prayer when others had no power.

Yes, Jesus brought about the Coronation of childhood. And Christmas is above all else The Children's Festival. It is not merely a time for commercialism to run rampant; for each tradesman to strive to outdo his competitor, and for the salespeople to have to wear themselves out in the mad Christmas rush. It is not a time for men to give themselves over to their appetites and passions. O, the shame of it, that there are some who do not feel they have celebrated Christmas unless they have become drunk and riotous! If there is any one day above another in the whole year when the drunkard should go home sober and in his right mind, it is this blessed Christmas season.

Christmas is not a time for the exchange of costly gifts. It's the children's festival, and if one has only the money for a single gift, let it be a toy for a child. Now that the Postmaster General has ruled that letters addressed to Santa Claus may be delivered to any one who asks for them, there never was such gracious opportunity for real wholesome fun, and for doing good at the same time. I hope that many of our citizens will play Santa Claus this year. Go to the Post Office and ask for at least one "Santa Claus letter," and thus make glad some dear child's heart.

Tell the child what Christmas means. Tell them the old, old story of the Christ child born in a stable, preaching his sweet gospel of love and at last dying on the cross for our sins. Let the day be one of joy, and power, and peace.

THE SHEPHERDS' CAROL.

A little Lamb is born to night,
Weak and helpless, pure and white.
All among the straw they laid Him
And an humble nest they made Him,
The little holy Lamb.

Who shall tell what this may be?
Light about His head we see!
All among the cattle lying,
So they kneel, in wonder eyeing
The little holy Lamb.

"Peace on earth, good will He brings!"
Listen, 'tis an angel sings.
Shepherds, cast your staves before Him;
Bending on your knees, adore Him,
The little holy Lamb.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

We have that joy forever, Congress and the Congressional Record; the President's message, which we all read with great relish and interpret according to our political leanings, and which, as usual, omits a matter of such supreme importance to the whole people as the liquor traffic and its iniquities; and the Waterways convention and all that, but we have just had in our nearby city of brotherly love the most significant gathering of the century. More than thirty religious bodies, aggregating over 18,000,000 of souls and representing, perhaps, 50,000,000, assembled, considered as a united body the great questions that confront our American Christianity, and reached conclusions practically unanimous. It was by all odds the most remarkable religious convention in the history of American Protestantism. For the first time the Protestant churches in the United States were practically and officially, if not organically, one. Such a meeting probably could never have been before the beginning of the twentieth century. Among the delegates were thirty bishops, eleven ex-moderators of Presbyterian assemblies, scores of presidents of universities and colleges, representatives of mission boards, theologians, preachers, scholars, authors, judges, editors, bankers, congressmen, railroad officials, captains of industry, etc., representing thirty-two religious bodies, and yet not a jarring note, and every sentiment of unity, charity and conquest was cheered to the echo. The meeting was the result of the great federation conference held in New York in 1905.

Federation, co-operation, closer fellowship among the people of God is the end sought. As we have forty-six states, each with its distinctive constitution, all joined in the federal union, so it is thought the different religious organizations may federate for the great interests that all hold in common. The very button of blue and gold worn by the delegates indicates union—a hand holding aloft a cluster of seven stars, based on Rev. 1:20: "The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches," the hand representing one body and the seven stars the different organizations holding to the same head. The council is organized with four members from each body, and one additional member for every 500,000 communicants or major fraction thereof, and is to meet every four years. It has no authority over the constituted bodies adhering to it, but its province is limited to the expression of counsel and recommendation of a course of action in matters of common interest to the churches, and has no authority to draw up a creed or common form of government or worship, or in any way to limit the full autonomy of the Christian bodies. As defined by the plan of federation adopted in New York, the objects of the council are: "To express the fellowship and catholic unity of the Christian church." "To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world." "To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the churches." "To secure a larger combined influence from the churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the laws of Christ in every relation to human life." "To assist in the organization of local branches of the Federal Council to promote its aim in their communities."

This great conference was a love feast and an inspiration. One of our veterans of long service on the firing line pronounced it as good as a "Campbellite meeting." It had reports of things done through federated action in winning victories that were full of cheer, as the suppression of the divorce evil in South Dakota and of race track gambling in New York, and of the work of the local federation in Los Angeles and of international service in the Congo basin. The first great discussions were in respect to foreign and home missions: "Go ye" was one of the notes of the council, and the greatest speech was that of Robert Speer, on co operation in the foreign field. It was declared that missionaries could not take these differences with them, and creed names could not even be translated. There seemed no doubt of the certainty of realizing world-wide fellowship. Every speech and report was full of it. From missionary bishops, members of foreign boards and others came messages of the wonderful movement toward Jesus Christ in India, the rise of a stalwart native chief in Japan, the sweeping away of musty controversies by the Chinese, the preaching of Christ only and free salvation through his atonement. "What shall be the creed of this militant host?" was the question. "Let us teach the simple truths," was the answer. "Creedal forms do not matter. They disappear if we try to teach them to the natives. Let the inspiration of the Bible, the deity of Christ, salvation through the atonement be the only message!" "We want not a negative tolerance," said another, "but a positive co-operation; not hands off, but hands together; not a federation of fraternity, but a living, spiritual, corporate unity, a living, unified body, as we have one living head."

It was resolved "that the practical and effective efforts at co-operation abroad have the hearty and even enthusiastic support of this Federal Council; that home organizations and churches promote in every possible way the development of this movement; that we favor closest possible federation of all Christian churches in foreign mission fields; that we express our approval of union educational institutions in mission countries."

On home missions the deliverances of the council were equally vigorous. Many things were said against the multiplying of churches in communities simply for the sake of ministering to denominational extension. Towns and cities were overburdened with churches, and this condition excited friction and jealousies, retarding the coming of the Kingdom. One knew of thirteen churches in one town of 1,000 people. Another said: "In a little town which I visited there were two churches on opposite corners, agreeing only in hating each other, making it entirely unnecessary for the devil to be present in person." Emphasis was laid upon the sinful waste in such instances, and large sums expended by home mission boards in helping to sustain weak churches, and the council advised that in the various cities where mission work is being carried on conferences between the different evangelizing agencies be called, as in Chicago during the past year, and special consideration be given to the matter of federative action as to work in congested districts, among foreigners, and in sections where new church organizations may be contemplated." Overlapping and overlooking were the evils inveighed against, that "overchurched communities may be relieved, unchurched communities supplied and the cause of Christ find a new place of honor in the hearts of men."

Very important discussions were held on the subject of the church and the immigrant, week day instruction in religion, state and local federations, religious instruction in higher institutions, religious instruction in the Sunday-school, family life, Sunday observance, temperance, the church and modern industry, and international relations and arbitration. Nothing seemed to move the council more thoroughly than the resolutions on the relation of the church to the workingman. It was a wise and just and scriptural and Christian action. The temperance report, which received hearty and unanimous approval, was uncompromisingly in favor of total abstinence and national prohibition, with scorn for Cannon as obstructing temperance legislation and applause for Taft because of his declaration that he would not use wine during his administration. Resolutions concerning the strict observance of the Lord's day met with cordial endorsement.

No one who loves the Lord could look upon this great assembly and not breathe in his heart a prayer for its success. Alexander Campbell would have come a thousand miles to address such a body, and would have made the ablest and most sympathetic speech on the program. Isaac Errett, who accepted the office of vice president of the American Congress of Churches in 1881, and had the heartiest interest in its work, would have felt as cordial sympathy with this movement. W. K. Pendleton would have graced this assembly as any one of the thirty bishops that shared in its deliberations, and counted it an honor to aid in so noble a cause. It was a great meeting that must prove historic and far reaching in its influence.

Another Overture for Peace and Liberty

Whereas, an unfortunate controversy, which threatens the peace and spirituality, the freedom of thought and speech, and the missionary activities of our brotherhood, has arisen;

And whereas, The Third Christian Church, which has always felt an interest in and contributed to the various branches of our organized work, has proudly proclaimed our "Unity of Faith, Liberty of Opinion, and Charity in all Things" to the people that have waited upon its ministry—

Be it therefore resolved:

1. That we, the officers of the Third Christian Church, deeply deplore the bitter controversy now going on in our brotherhood journals, and likewise the sectarian tendencies that have called it forth.

2. That, while H. L. Willett and the Centennial Committee have been the objects of attack, we feel that a great, fundamental principle of Our Plea is being jeopardized, and that every loyal Disciple of Christ should rally to its protection.

3. That we have perfect confidence in H. L. Willett's loyalty to Our Plea and in his ability to stand as one of the brotherhood's representatives upon our Centennial platform; that his resignation or enforced retirement would result in a future crisis, similar to or worse than the one through which we are now passing; that we urge him to remain upon the program of the Centennial Convention; and that we also urge the committee to refrain from either retiring him or dissolving itself.

4. That neither H. L. Willett nor any other person or outside influence has, in any way, inspired this action upon our part.

5. That these resolutions be spread upon the official minutes of the Third Christian Church, and that a copy be sent to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, the Christian Standard and the New Christian Century.

"In Faith, Unity: In Opinion, Liberty"

A SYMPOSIUM.

A Layman's Opinion.

Your symposium on "In Faith, Unity; in Opinion, Liberty," is exceedingly timely, and, I presume, is meant to be participated in by the clergy only. Although a layman, I can not refrain from addressing you on so vital a subject.

Every Christian, or near-Christian, expects one to believe the fundamental truths of the Christian religion, if one is to be recognized as a Christian. However, the interpretations of innumerable theological questions may be given many shadings without seriously affecting the truth of these questions, or in any way reflecting discreditably on the honesty, ability or consecration of any one making the interpretations. By way of illustration: If all of the ministers of our brotherhood were invited to interpret a masterpiece painting, how many, or few, would agree absolutely as to its manifold virtues and beauties? Some would appreciate and magnify virtues wholly unseen by others; thus in the end the interpretations would be multiplied, until each man would have one peculiarly his own. In short, each man would divine the motif and the results in the light of his own perspective.

Just so it is in theological interpretations. Individuals come up to these great problems with vastly varied perspectives, personal experiences and abilities; hence we have so many greatly variant opinions. Perhaps each opinion has much of truth in it; but it is hardly likely any one would embody all truth. Then there is room for every man's vision of truth. Who is to be the final judge of the validity of these opinions?

From all of the discussions carried on in our papers, during the past two years or more, I can draw but one conclusion,—namely: that our ministry is pathologically affected with churlish chauvinism. The specific for this would be a better educated ministry, an educational standard which must be reached before one be allowed to enter the ministry. Very truly yours,

W. C. Cauble.

[This symposium is not limited to ministers (we have no "clergy"), but our non-preacher brethren have equal rights. The writer of the foregoing, however, is not a layman in medicine, as his last clause shows. —EDITOR.]

Faith and Opinion.

Where shall we draw the line? The line has thus far been largely a fanciful one, and calls for a fresh consideration of both words. We have contrasted opinion with the Bible teachings, forgetting that there may be differences of opinion as to what the Bible teaches. The Bible must be interpreted. We must apply our mental faculties to it diligently and carefully, and the conclusion will be "our opinion." No truth, though it be of divine revelation, can be of any value to us until it becomes our opinion.

We may well distinguish between opinions about purely speculative matters, about which the Bible has no word, and concerning which there is little light from any source, and opinions as to what the Bible teaches on important matters. We do well not to make the first a test of fellowship. But we can not say that the assassination of Julius Cæsar is a matter of mere opinion, and the swallowing of Jonah a matter of faith, because one is recorded in the Bible and the other is not.

The real question is, how far shall we make our opinions as to what the Bible teaches a test of fellowship? The difficulty is not so great as it may seem, for all Christians are in substantial agreement on the most important matters, essentials, fundamentals, or whatever we may please to call them. It is in regard to disputed points that the problem becomes difficult. But here, as a matter of fact, a great variety of opinions is tolerated, even on important matters, except where prejudice is strong, or where controversy waxes warm on live issues. And so the problem dwindles down to these live issues. These are not always the same, and by no means always concern the most important things.

Alexander Campbell was of the opinion that "baptizo" meant, rigidly and literally, "immerse," and ably defended his opinion in his writings and in public debate. The opposite opinion that "baptizo," in the current usage of New Testament times, meant more than immerse; that it had a spiritual content; that in this content was its essential value; that nothing of its essential value or meaning is lost by change of form, and that, therefore, immersion is not of perpetual obligation, has also been ably defended in learned volumes. By what right do we make Mr. Campbell's opinion, or ours, a test of fellowship in our churches? I see little good to come from receiving the unimmersed, yet our present position seems inconsistent. Would we not be more consistent by frankly recognizing the inconsistency, and admitting that we consider it expedient, under present conditions, to make "our opinions" a test of fellowship?

It has been suggested that we may hold some things as "private opinions," and keep silent about them for the sake of peace. But is it not just here, precisely, that we need discussion? Why continue to debate settled questions? It is not a question of how little truth we can get to heaven with. We want all truth, even if some of it has no more value than a vermiform appendix, as Brother Chilton suggests. We shall never learn otherwise than by free discussion. Nothing is to be gained by sealed lips. We can have Christian union only when we have grace enough to grant to one another the fullest liberty of opinion and discussion. We do not want union which comes of loose convictions, or timidity of utterance; but that unity which is consistent with the strongest convictions, and a manly defence of them. When two or more men of strong convictions can defend them in uncompromising debate, and still have grace enough to be fair and open-minded, and love one another as brothers, they can unite, and not till then. Until then there must be division or loss of truth.

Thomas Jefferson said: "Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is free to combat it." The cranks, fanatics and immoderate dogmatists must either be treated as brothers, and their opinions be allowed to take the consequences of free discussion, or they must be left on the outside. "The free expression of opinion," says Gladstone, "as experience has taught us, is the safety valve of passion. That noise of the rushing steam alarms the timid; but it is the sign that we are safe."

Let me suggest another distinction between faith and opinion: Opinion is intellectual assent. Faith is the consent of the heart and will do what we believe to be true. Opinion is faith in embryo. The value of our opinions is their value for life. It might be a good test of our opinions to put them to work. Let us put all our opinions into the crucible of a great missionary and evangelistic campaign, and see how quickly the dross will be burned away.

College City, Cal. Frank E. Boren.

[Brethren are in danger of making the distinction between faith and opinion much more difficult than the New Testament makes it, or than our fathers made it. The New Testament does not tell us about faith in things or in doctrines, but in God and in Christ. Faith relates to a person. We do not believe in repentance or in baptism, or in prayer, but in Jesus Christ, and do those things because he taught and commanded them. A Christian is one who believes in Christ and obeys him to the best of his ability. But Christians may and do err in doctrine and practice. Reformations are efforts to return to Christ's will, and they seek to embody themselves in local churches which are supposed to be conformed to New Testament faith and practice. If the form of baptism has been changed so that it does not symbolically express the inner meaning and spiritual significance, it is not inconsistent in a reformation seeking to restore New Testament Christianity to insist on the original form, as well as on its spiritual content. This does not involve dechristianizing all who have made a mistake as to the form of baptism, but it does involve the idea that all Christians have not conformed to the New Testament pattern of church membership, which the reformation is seeking to restore and to illustrate.—EDITOR.]

Faith is belief that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Opinion is all else. E. W. McDiarmid.

Berkeley, W. Va.

I think the symposium now on in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is very timely. I send herewith an excerpt from "Our Position," by Isaac Errett, that seems to me to cover the ground well on "In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty." Perhaps the younger readers of your paper have not seen it. Brother Errett says: "With us, the divinity and Christhood of Jesus is more than a mere item of doctrine—it is the central truth in the Christian system, and is in an important sense the Creed of Christianity. It is the one fundamental truth which we are jealously careful to guard against all compromise. . . . All who trust in the Son of God and obey him are our brethren, however wrong they may be about anything else; and those who do not trust in this divine Savior for salvation, and obey his commandments, are not our brethren, however intelligent and excellent they may be in all beside. Faith in the unequivocal testimonies concerning Jesus—his incarnation, life, teaching, sufferings, death for sin, resurrection, exaltation and divine sovereignty and priesthood, and obedience to the plain commands he has given us (Disciples), therefore, the basis and bond of Christian fellowship. In judgments, merely inferential, we reach conclusions as nearly unanimous as we can, and where we fail, exercise forbearance, in the confidence that God will lead us into final agreement. In matters of expediency, where we are left free to follow our own best judgment, we allow the majority to rule. In matters of opinion—that is, in matters touching which the Bible is silent, or so obscure in its revelations as not to admit of definite conclusions —we allow the largest liberty, so long as none judges his brother, or insists on forcing his own opinions on others, or on making them an occasion of strife." (Italics mine.)

"These are my sentiments."

SOME OF OUR BIBLE SCHOOLS

BOISE, IDAHO.

First Christian.

O. E. Cook, superintendent; C. F. Easter and F. H. Lemon, assistants; Lillian Thompson, secretary; Mrs. Bertha Russell, treasurer. Average attendance, 135.

This school has no special classes, but nearly all are organized and are doing outside work from the regular Sunday morning study. There is a teacher training class which started out with about 35 members, but not all have remained with the class. One of the most interesting things in this class was the "Teacher Training Bee," held at the home of one of its members. The two captains, appointed by the teacher, chose sides as in the old-fashioned "spelling bee," and the first 212 questions in the book were given out to the sides in turn. This was found to be interesting as well as instructive. The equipment is good, aside from the room, the church being small. All the classes, save three, are in one large room, and two of these three are in the same room in another part of the building. There is a piano and a splendid chorister. A plan for organizing an orchestra is now under way, and will be led by one of the most capable leaders in the city. There are plenty of good workers, who are not afraid to do things. The weekly collection is $4.25. The funds are managed by the treasurer, superintendent and secretary. Over $100 a year is given for missions, both home and foreign. Every Sunday morning the Christian invitation is given to the boys and girls in the Sunday-school, and many confessions have been made in this way. There are very few of the boys or girls in the Sunday-school who are not Christians.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON.

Central Christian.

Charles L. Coffman, supt.; F. Segessenman, assistant; Mrs. J. C. Goodenough, primary supt.; Miss Davis, beginners' supt.; Azel Royer, sec.; D. C. Bailey, treas.; K. L. Tanner, librarian. Enrollment, 280; average attendance, 215.

There are cradle roll, beginners', primary, intermediate and adult departments in this school, which meets in three departments. The cradle roll is well organized. The Baraca Class of young men and the Philathea of young ladies have an enrollment of 30 each. The teacher-training class meets on Wednesday. There is no special equipment other than full supplies of literature, attendance cards, etc. There are special class rooms and an orchestra of seven pieces. The average collections amount to $5.52, with a special collection for missions and outside expenses. The offering for the foreign field was $113 and $5 was given to state work. C. F. Stevens is the present pastor of the Central Church, where B. E. Utz formerly was.

PORTLAND, OREGON.

First Christian.

Miss Harriett E. Moorehouse, supt.; R. E. Bristow, first assistant; R. B. McClung, second assistant; J. C. Clark, supt. men and boys' department; George Watkins, Harriet E. Moorehouse, Superintendent First Bible School, Portland, Ore.

sec.; C. H. Jones, treas.: Mrs. A. O. Kellogg, supt. home department. Enrollment, 400; average attendance, 255.

This school has beginners, primary, junior, adult, cradle roll and home departments. The special classes organized are the Baraca, Philathea, Berean, Eureka, and Business Men's. There is also a teacher-training class. The equipment is not very good. A building committee is needed for the school, and incidentally for the church. There are eighteen classes, as many good teachers, and others in training. A Bible school worker is employed, who gives one-half her time in the interests of the school. There are 100 in the home department, and almost 100 in the cradle roll. The school manages its own funds, all orders being signed by the superintendent. The average collection is $12.15. The Children's day offering for foreign missions was $182.80; the birthday offering up till last June, $18.52; and for Oregon state work $55 was contributed, making a total of more than $256 for missions.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA.

Central Christian.

Earl S. Barr, supt.; C. M. Bross, assistant supt.; Miss Lutie Williams, supt. primary; Mrs. Gerald Utley, supt. intermediate; Gerald Utley, supt. junior; Leonard Jones, sec. Enrollment, 350; average attendance, 265.

The school has seven departments, each with a superintendent—primary, junior, intermediate, young men, young ladies, adult Bible class and home. The last department, which numbers 50, is not included in the above enrollment and attendance. There are two teacher-training classes numbering over 100. Every class in the school has a map, and each one in the primary, junior and intermediate department has a separate class room. The church is poorly equipped for Sunday-school work, heavy white sheeting curtains having to be used, but these curtain rooms are found a great help in these three departments. The average collection is about $11. The school has its own bank account, and all disbursements are made by check. Last year it won the flag for California for the largest offering for home missions. This year the offering was not quite so much, but will reach $75. For foreign work it gave $250 last year, and expects to do as well this year. Its teacher-training class is rather new in its plan. There is a very healthy intermediate Christian Endeavor, as well as Senior Endeavor Society, which finish their Sunday evening lesson by seven o'clock. They assemble jointly, numbering about 70, and the minister, W. E. Crabtree, leads in the weekly teacher-training lesson. The interest is most excellent and the intermediates are all trying to get the state diploma upon completion of their work. The other training class meets on Wednesday evening after prayer-meeting, its attendance running from 40 to 50. There is a teachers' meeting at 6:30 on Wednesday evening an hour before prayer-meeting, and after thoroughly discussing the lesson for the next Sunday, this body becomes the executive committee of the school where the difficulties and troubles are discussed, and new plans for enlargement made. About twenty-five out of the forty officers and teachers attend the meeting. Little's Cross and Crown system is just being adopted, but instead of commencing now, pins will be awarded on the record of the past year, some getting the gold pin at once. The class card is the record by which this award is made.

ASHLAND, OREGON.

Mrs. Frank Hill Chamberlain, superintendent; James Beagle, assistant; Georgiana Jackson, secretary; Jean Powell, treasurer; May Benedict, librarian; Nell Palmer, organist. Enrollment, 208; average attendance, 136.

This school is graded as nearly as possible as the pupils are graded in the public school. There are two organized classes—"Bereans," a young men's class, and "Ever Faithful," a young girls' class from eleven to fifteen years of age. In the way of equipment there are five fine, large maps and four class rooms. The one great drawback is in supplying teachers. A teacher training class was organized, but it was thought best to discontinue it, at least for a while. The collection, which averages about $2.50 per Sunday, is taken on the free-will plan. This year $135 was given to foreign missions, $21 to home missions and $50 to the missionary boat, "The Oregon."

An Interview with Dr. Dye

[While in the office of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Dr. Dye submitted to an interview which was stenographically reported, and is submitted to our readers.—EDITOR.]

Dr. Dye, what influenc s led you to adopt the life of a missionary and to go to Africa?

I think it was more of a combination of circumstances and influences, than any one special thing. I had always read missionary literature. When I became a Christian it seemed to be a question every one of us must solve: What are we going to do with ourselves in relation to the Kingdom? I could not see anything but that I must at least offer myself for the service. Whether I would be accepted or not was another question. So, after my baptism, I joined the Christian Endeavor and the Y. M. C. A., was sent to Lake Geneva to a Bible conference, and here heard the call of the field. Africa seemed to take a pre-eminent place in our thought, because of Livingstone's and Stanley's travels and the great need of workers. I read a little book called "Murdered Millions," by George Dolcott, which turned me to medical missions, and after graduation from the high school I corresponded with Hiram College and with Dr. Dolcott, of New York City, as to further preparation for service. The two correspondents answered indefinitely, at the same time. I replied that I must have both of their answers by a certain date, or I could not decide. Of course the college year was opening, and Dr. Dolcott urged me to come to New York, that he had made arrangements, and so I went. I got started in and in the senior year of our course a cablegram came, saying that Dr. Biddle had died. It was in 1898 that I volunteered to go. Of course I had volunteered for foreign missions, but I offered myself to the society, and after a visit to Cincinnati was appointed to go at once.

Brother W. H. Scott, of Ionia, influenced me. He had started out a number of young men in the ministry."

How do the people among whom you labor in Africa compare with the negroes of this country?

"They are not the same type at all. Our people at Bolenge are very superior in intelligence, have exceptional memories, are very keen and clever in debate and repartee. They have marvelous oratorical abilities and powers. They are not as emotional as the negro; they are not stolid or stupid; they are bright and active, minds alert; very easily trained and taught. In three months one of the men learned to read and write. The ordinary child will learn to read and write in a year's time, never having seen a book in his life. They are not negroes. They are a different and distinct race of black, called Bantu. They are one of the great races of mankind. They have a wonderfully constructed language, with rules of grammar and rhetoric as inviolable as our own language. There is no slang in their language. It is most scientifically constructed upon a basis of principles of inflection. The concord system is wonderful, considering the fact of their social conditions and their apparent degradation, which leads us to believe they have come from a high fountain of civilization. The Tower of Babel story, the flood, the fragments of the Joseph story, the fragments of the Ten Commandments seem to indicate that they have come from a higher civilization—at least a civilization in contact with the Old Testament."

How do you account for the remarkable success of the Bolenge mission, omitting, of course, the personality of the missionaries?

"In the first place, we ignore all previous conditions. Bolenge was twice abandoned by the missionary societies. The unfortunate reputation of the trading missionary, caused by non-support of their societies at home, had to be lived down. The premature organization of a native church of children, which was nothing more nor less than the white man's game to them, was an influence to be overcome. This was worse than heathenism, and had to be lived down. We simply ignored everything of the old methods and what had been done there. Then the medical feature of our work, by which we put the witch doctors out of business, was an important factor."

Do you hold up the high standard of Christian living to the native Christians, or lower to suit their condition?.

We insist that it must be the Bible standard or nothing. We do not admit polygamists into the church. We may be too strict, but that has been our policy. We taught them, as soon as possible, the Christ-story, and won our way into their friendship by kind treatment and fairness. We broke down their old superstition largely through medicine, and if there is any one thing at Bolenge, more than any other, it is the fact that we have been able to blot from their lives the influence of this old superstition of the witch doctor, which for generations has held the people in bondage. They have come to us for medicine and we have been able to help them, and they come back to us and ask us to teach them."

What about the possibilities of education and self-support?.

In the first place they know no basis of education other than what we have given them. They live the simple life. They do not know the complicated mechanism of our life here at home. In their earnestness and love of the message, they are providing a propaganda of their own to take this message to their own people. This is self-supporting. This is a prophecy to us of a larger propaganda as we are able to establish other centers of work for another radius of propaganda to spring from."

You believe in the permanence of this work, do you?

"Yes indeed; let me illustrate: Duela is the capital of the Kameruns, and in that village, thirty-five years ago, the English missionaries left a little native church. They sorrowfully lamented the loss of their missionaries. That native church has maintained its evangelists, its own native school teachers, through all these years, and there are now seven mission churches sprung from the old mother church in that town of the Kameruns."

What impression has your visit home given you of our churches?

"I see a church only for a few hours, and do not get into its inner life. But my impression of their sentiment towards missions is, that they have never realized fully their relation to the missionary propaganda. They have lacked the necessary information. It has seemed to most of the churches, and to the ordinary church member, like throwing money down a well. They never felt that there was much return. The interest and enthusiasm that has been created, as we have gone about, has encouraged us very much indeed. We shall go back to the field with a new courage, and a new feeling that the support and interest and prayers of the brotherhood are behind us. As far as giving money is concerned, the churches at home have not learned that yet. They have not yet caught the vision of giving, as the little church of Bolenge has. If our churches and our members had a vision of the world's needs, as I see them, they would waste no time in theological hair-splitting, nor in the flummeries and fripperies of church life. But we are coming to a better day."

GOOD CITIZENSHIP. By Grover Cleveland. Price, 50 cents. Henry Altemus Co.

This little legacy of one of America's noblemen ought to be widely appreciated, for it is a good book in every sense of the word. Mr. Cleveland in it gives the essence of his thought on civic virtue. It embodies two of his speeches.

LILIES OF ETERNAL PEACE. By Lillian Whiting. Price, 75 cents. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.

This is a study of immortality in which the author strives to show how death is but the gate of life, and that it is not a thing necessarily to be dreaded, but a condition of an opportunity for a beautiful and happy life beyond.

SUPREMACY OF THE HEART LIFE. A Plea for the Regnancy of Love. By W. T. Moore, LL.D. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, or Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis. Price, $1.25 net.

This unusually interesting volume of more than 300 pages is a product of the brain and heart of W. T. Moore, LL.D., and is from the press of the Fleming H. Revell Company. Dr. Moore makes an earnest, logical and strong plea for the regnancy of the heart life. He believes that the greatest of human experiences is love. The heart, he is certain, will finally gain the victory. This work is discursive. A number of problems bearing incidentally on the principal theme are discussed in the well-known style of this distinguished author. It is doubtful if any thoughtful reader will agree with the writer in all that he says, from first to last. This is one of the attractions of the book to me. I enjoy reading a well written work which causes me to use interrogation points—a book that stirs me up mentally. The "Supremacy of the Heart Life" presents novel positions. The author is a thinker. His mind is judicial. His spirit is liberal. He is thought-provoking. New thoughts are introduced—thoughts at any rate new to me. The thoughts, musings, reasonings, questionings and speculations of a long and studious life are frankly exhibited on these pages. The downright sincerity and good-natured earnestness of the writer are constantly in evidence. The book is full of a magnificent personality. Dr. Moore knows when he indulges in speculations. He understands the difference between religion and theology. He also knows the relation of each to the other. He appreciates the fact that an acceptance of his theories is not an indispensable condition of eternal life; he does not deal out damnation to those who reject his interpretations. Dr. Moore, in this work, is fresh, vigorous, up-to-date. He is, withal, sweet-spirited. He could not be bitter. Dogmatism is contrary to his nature. There is not an intimation that he thinks he has completed the curriculum of all possible theological information. W. T. Moore is a seeker. He desires to know. He is anxious that others also shall advance in a knowledge of divine things. Some of his notions are old-fashioned. There is no doubt as to his personal convictions as to a personal devil. He is always, everywhere, and on all sorts of topics outspoken. He never was known to conceal an opinion. Such a man is refreshing. What he says is inspirational. The longer W. T. Moore lives the more interesting he becomes. The work has been, to me, unusually stimulating. It may not be so to you. I think, however, that if you will read the "Supremacy of the Heart Life" you will be interested, entertained, benefited.

B. B. Tyler.

Our Budget

—Christmas greetings to all our readers!

—Compliments of the season to all fellow editors, our companions in misery!

—Good will to all mankind, with malice toward none and charity for all!

—The manger-crib at Bethlehem holds the center of the world's thought to-day, and the Babe of nineteen centuries ago is now the world's greatest Ruler.

—With our next issue, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST closes its forty-fifth volume and the Editor his fortieth year of editorial service. We shall keep "open house" for the first and, perhaps, second issues in January, and our friends may call or send their cards of greeting.

—The Assistant Editor, with his father, Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, is enjoying an outing of a couple of weeks in Texas, their destination being Brownsville and Point Isabel. Send warning to the ducks and fish!

—Such is the flood of news and correspondence that, with our limitations of space, we have been compelled to condense a good deal of what we publish, and to leave over for later issues other matter that we should be glad to have published at once. Great meetings are in progress in all directions, and everywhere the banner of the cross seems to be advancing. Our column of telegraphic news is specially inspiring.

—In the press of other matters we have neglected to make mention of a very pleasing incident in connection with the fiftieth wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister F. E. Udell, two of the leading and most faithful members of the Union Avenue Christian Church. The church took cognizance of the day, December 8, and had prepared a beautiful, artistic testimonial of the church to their beautiful Christian lives and characters, and their fidelity to the church in this city for more than forty years. This was signed officially by the members of the official board, ratified by the church, and presented to them at their home on the anniversary day above mentioned, as they were both confined to their home by illness, from which they are now gradually recovering. Brother Udell has been a pillar in our cause in this city for more than the lifetime of a generation, and his interest and benefactions extended to all our national enterprises. As elder of the Union Avenue church and chairman of its building committee, he has rendered most invaluable service. His good wife has ably seconded him in all his work, and has been his companion in their wide travels. They both hold an honored place in the church and a warm place in the hearts of their brethren and sisters. May their useful lives be spared to us yet many years!

—On last Sunday afternoon the Editor attended the first meeting of the children of the Christian Orphans' Home in this city in the chapel of their new and splendid building at Labadie and Euclid avenues. This is the building toward which R. H. Stockton, of this city, contributed $50,000 in memory of his wife, Bettie Mae Stockton. The entire building and furnishings cost, we understand, about $90,000, and stands in a beautiful natural park of twelve acres. The building is splendidly equipped and located, and is an institution of which the entire brotherhood may well be proud. It was pleasing to hear the children recite from memory, in chorus, such familiar portions of the scriptures as the Twenty-third Psalm and the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. Brothers Garrigues and Dowling, of the Hammett Place Church, where the children now attend school, were conducting the exercises. Mrs. Rowena Mason is the president of the Orphans' Home and Miss Brown is the matron. J. W. Perry, vice-president of the National Bank of Commerce, is the president of the National Benevolent Association, of which the Christian Orphans' Home in this city is only one of many such institutions in different parts of the country. J. H. Mohorter is the efficient general secretary of this organization and a number of noble women are giving their lives to it, while a number of our leading business men are on its advisory board.

—W. A. Morrison, of Windsor, Mo., has resigned the pastorate there to take charge of the work at Higginsville, Mo., and he will enter upon his new field Jan. 1, 1909. Those interested in this pastorate should address Nate McCutchan.

—B. V. Black resigned the work at Mankato, Minn., about three months ago to accept the work at Duluth. He reports the outlook in that "Chicago of the Northwest" as bright and hopeful. "This state," he says, "is surely a splendid one to try out the grit and gump of the preachers."

—The Board of Ministerial Relief is very anxious to secure sufficient funds this year for the support of the old preachers, and are pleading for an additional $25 000 for the permanent fund. This is a very worthy aim, and we trust that there will be a ready response to it.

—There is much activity in the great Northwest, as is evidenced by the number of evangelists laboring in Washington and Oregon at present. We mention only a few names: Small, Brandt, Martin, Dorris, Ware, Jackson, Hansaker, Olson, Kellems, and others are enlisted in the new movement.

—The Foreign Mission rallies, conducted by A. McLean and Stephen J. Corey, are more largely attended this year than in previous years. The moving picture feature of these rallies is very attractive and very instructive. There are a number of calls for these rallies that can not be met for want of time.

—We are glad to learn that R. A. McCorkle, Missionary of the Foreign Society at Osaka, Japan, who was forced home on account of sickness some two months ago, has made great improvement. He has gained thirty pounds in weight. He hopes to be able to return soon. He is at present with friends at Akron, Ohio.

—The Foreign Society has received two gifts of $500 each; one from a friend in Iowa, and one from a friend in Kentucky. These two gifts are to help make good the $5,000 R. A. Long proposes to give, contingent upon raising $20,000 additional by August 1, 1909, for Vigan, P. I., school. A pledge also of $500 received for this school.

—W. Thompson, evangelist, reports that his home in Mt. Carmel, Ill., was burned to the ground Sunday, December 12. They had just moved there and settled. His wife and children were saved in their night clothes, everything else being burned. He is now in a meeting at Minonk, Ill. His friends have a good opportunity of making him and his family Christmas presents.

—E. R. Moore, one of the members at Davenport, Ia., writes that Miss Newcomer, the State C. W. B. M. secretary, was present on C. W. B. M. day with that congregation, when the collection amounted to $135, "proving conclusively that this people have the missionary spirit." S. M. Perkins, the minister, and W. B. Clemmer, now of Rock Island, have just exchanged pulpits.

—The new missionary, C. C. Wilson, and wife reached Honolulu, their new station, Nov. 10, and have taken up their work in earnest. For four months previous to their arrival, A. C. McKeever, of the First Church, that city, carried on much of the mission work in addition to his regular work. During that period there were ten additions, nine by confession and one by baptism.

—A. F. Stahl accepted a call to the church at Steubenville, Ohio, but by his request his resignation tendered to the officers of the church at Wabash Avenue, Akron, Ohio, was not made public until after the Mitchell-Bilby meeting had closed. "I never compelled myself," he writes, "to do a harder thing than I am now doing when I leave this church, but it is in fine condition for the next man the church may call."

—Mrs. L. D. Payne, mother of our lamented Flournay Payne, who died about a year ago in Colorado, having recently read in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the report of the Silver Convention in Denver, with its reference to Brother Payne, finds her mother-heart touched by the reference to that noble son who gave his life to the Cause. Blessed is the mother that can give such a son to the cause of Christ, and blessed is the memory that forever dwells in the heart of such a mother.

—Hiram College is in the throes of a struggle to complete successfully its campaign for $100,000 new endowment. It has passed beyond the $80,000 line. Twenty thousand dollars remains to be secured before January 1st. It would be a great mistake if the friends of Hiram should allow this opportunity to pass unimproved, and we feel sure they will not. President Bates is making a heroic struggle, and all the friends of the institution should rally at once to its support.

—J. Newton Cloe, after three years of successful ministry at Donovan, Ill., has resigned the work there, to take effect at the close of the present year, at which time he will be open for a call to some other church. He desires a church that is progressive, and wants to keep going; one that wants to work. "I am not afraid of work and I expect a church to do things." We are sure there are many churches among us that want just that kind of a pastor. Address him as above.

—John Mullen, minister of the First Church of Christ, Findlay, Ohio, reports a missionary rally there held by Secretary Corey, of the Foreign Society, with W. H. Hanna, of the Philippines, and M. D. Adams, of India, neighboring churches joining with them, on December 9, which was a blessing and a benediction to all present. Brother Mullen says "It is a blessing to any church to have such men as Corey, Adams and Hanna for even one day." He adds, "We shall never get away from the instruction of that hour."

—Nathaniel Jacks will soon be in the field of evangelism, and he may be addressed at 801 Olive St., Texarkana, Tex. Brother Jacks recently resigned the pastorate of our church there after a term of good service. He can make dates beginning with March 1, 1909, for any month thereafter. His terms will be reasonable, and he will go anywhere. His son Ezra is to be his singer. He is said to have a good cultured voice, and special qualifications for soul winning. The record of Brother Jacks is well-known in the South.

—It seems that the statement was made in our columns recently that A. B. Chamberlain had left the church at Auburn, N. Y., and that the pulpit there is vacant. This, we hear from Brother Braden, who has been pastor at Auburn for nearly four years, is a mistake. Brother Chamberlain goes from Throopsville, N. Y., where he was pastor. The elders of the church at Auburn have received applications for the pulpit, and the announcement we now make will let our readers know the exact situation.

—W. E. Reavis, Stanbury, Mo., reports the work at that place as making substantial growth. "We have already reached some of our Centennial aims," he writes, "and hope to reach others. There were 190 present at our Bible school last Lord's day, and an offering of $6.43, without contest or rally. In the evening the C. W. B. M. gave their annual program, and received three new members, and an offering of several dollars was taken. We have a live Junior of 85 members, which supports an orphan in India, and is busy at present preparing a Christmas box to be sent to the orphanage at St. Louis. Our midweek prayer-meeting has an average attendance of between fifty and sixty."

—It will be remembered that the first Sunday in February is Christian Endeavor day for foreign missions among all the Christian Endeavor societies of the world. The societies among our people have done themselves great credit in the observance of the day. They began in 1903 with only 100 societies enlisted. Last year 800 societies observed the day. Justin N. Green, who has had many years of experience in working among young people, has prepared an attractive exercise. The title of it is, "Our Damoh Boys." The office of the Foreign Society will furnish this free of charge. In 1902, the Endeavor societies gave $5,072. Last year they gave $13,171. The Centennial watch-word for Christian Endeavorers for Foreign Missions is $20,000. Since the organization of the Endeavor movement, our Endeavor societies have contributed to the work of the Foreign Society nearly $105,000.

—We call attention to a charming little volume by a writer whose poetry has given much pleasure to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. "Poems and Songs," by Thomas Curtis Clark, can be had for 75 cents from the Christian Publishing Company, or direct from Mr. Clark, 1438 Granville Place, St. Louis. The volume is bound in cloth, and contains seventy-three poems, some of the titles of which are: "The Way that Leads Back Home;" "How Far Is It to Childhood Town?" "The Island of Dreams;" "God Is Not Far;" "Cæsar and Christ;" "The Prayer of the Soul;" "The Death of Summer" and "Three Lullabys." Mr. Clark is also a writer of songs, a number of which—"Somewhere," "A Vision of Peace" and "A Southern Lullaby"—have been published and have had success. Others soon to be published are: "Shine On, O Star," "The Valley of Rest," "A Queen of the Long Ago," "After the Night Is Noon" and "Lead Us, O Shepherd." Mr. Clark writes both the words and music of most of his songs.

—The annual meeting of the church at Wellsburg, W. Va., which was the second church organized by the Disciples, and is the oldest existing church in the brotherhood, showed the work there to be in good condition. Each department made its report. The minister, Francis M. Biddle, who has had charge for six months, reported twelve additions by confession and baptism and ten otherwise, showing an increase during the six months from 339 to 357. There was raised for local church support during this period $654, for missions $121, and since this report we have heard of three other baptisms and three additions otherwise. The Bible school has an attendance of 143. It publicly promoted a class from the cradle roll, and conducted first examinations for a normal class of thirteen. A junior and intermediate C. E. have been organized, each conducted by the minister. Brother Biddle recently exchanged pulpits with Herbert Smith, of Follansbee, and spoke at the West Virginia Convention and traveled in Pennsylvania for a couple of weeks in the interest of Bethany College.

—J. A. McKinney has just been elected Bible school superintendent at Van Alstyne, Tex., for the seventeenth time. This fact in itself shows how faithful he has been in the work.

—We are in receipt of the Bible Readers' Friendship Calendar, put out by the Church Calendar Co., 156 Fifth Ave., New York. It is prepared for the wall or for the desk. It has a cheering message for each day in the year.

—On C. W. B. M. Day 15 new names were added to the auxiliary at Van Alstyne, Texas, and liberal contributions made to the work. The adult class and the teacher-training class each exceed 30 in attendance.

—J. W. Webb is minister of our church at Denair, Cal., where the prospects are good. J. N. Lester, formerly of Waukegon, Ill., is elder. The Bible school has more members than the church, and every woman belongs to the C. W. B. M. A teacher-training class is being started.

—J. Riley Middleton reports good interest manifested at Duncan, Okla., where earnest plans are being made for the future. One addition to the membership is reported. He and his family were given a hearty greeting on taking the work here, which he believes is a great field.

—J. V. Coombs and T. Ellmore Lucey are in a good meeting at Carmi, Ill. Under the same evangelists there were over 100 additions there a year ago. Following this meeting the singer, Brother Lucey, will leave for a lyceum tour in the West Indies, South and Central America, Mexico, etc.

—"I am not greatly disturbed over the present situation. God lives and rules. This is his cause. I have done what I believed to be right. I have prayed over the matter. I have taken counsel with some of the wisest men among us. I am not losing sleep about that, but I am losing sleep about the work."—A. McLean.

—H. C. Gresham, of Selma, Ala., and Miss Ruth LaRue, of Shaw, Kan., were united in marriage at the home of the bride on Dec. 1. Brother Gresham is one of our rising young ministers. They expect to locate with some good church for pastoral work. J. R. Grant and J. P. Childs officiated at the wedding.

—The church at Seneca, Mo., has called John L. Lewis, of Shawnee, Ohio, to preach for only half time. He has had twelve years' experience and a good college education. He is already on the field and will evangelize in the county the other half of his time. He reported that the church is much pleased with him.

—A telegram from evangelists O. E. Hamlin and Thomas from Chanute, Kan., received too late for our last issue, announced seventy additions in the first two weeks. We regret to learn that the pastor's wife had been near death's door from the beginning of the meeting, but the last information was that there was a slight improvement.

—Richard Martin, the evangelist, has just closed his second meeting during this year at Fredonia, Kan. There were 42 more additions, making 302 in both meetings. Some of the best people in the town were gathered in. The crowds attending the second meeting were even greater than those in the first. The evangelist is at Garnett, Kan., now.

—At Modesto, the county seat of Stanislaus county, we have a strong church, this part of the country being an attraction to homeseekers, while there have been additions by confession and baptism. There is a good C. W. B. M., and other departments, as well as a brotherhood. L. O. Ferguson is the minister, and is doing a good work. A protracted meeting is in contemplation.

—"The symposium conducted by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is of great and timely interest. I rejoice in the kind and tolerant spirit maintained consistently by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. If such a sentence as the following: "Certainly our missionary boards are not (honest and sincere)"—should appear in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, a great many of us would feel like taking the advice that Job's wife gave to him. E. W. McDiarmid.

—A very interesting service was held a few Sunday evenings ago at the Christian Church, Columbia, Mo., when talks were made by members of the Student Volunteer Band. There are fourteen volunteers among these young people for the foreign field. They are all students either at Christian College, the Bible College, or the State University. Just about half of the graduates of the Bible College are already in the foreign field, and Dr. Jennie Fleming, a member of the Columbia church, is its living-link in Harda, India.

—The church at Memphis, Mo., recently had a men's banquet which was a big success. Among the toasts were "The Church and Its Minister;" "The Boy Problem;" "What Would the Prayer Meeting Be Without The Women;" "Funny Side of a Preacher's Life;" "The Church's Obligation To The Community;" "The Church's Brother-in-law," and "The Sunday-school." M. J. Nicoson is the pastor. The veteran E. O. Mallory was also present. The local paper gives large space, printing the pictures of seven of the speakers.

—When a car-load of members of a congregation walks in on their minister and his wife, we are not surprised that they are surprised. This is what befell Brother and Sister Noah Garwick at Waterloo, Ia. The church at Cedar Falls was established about two and one-half years ago. Brother Garwick meets with them each Lord's day afternoon. They now have a membership of about 50, and a Bible school of 70 enrolled, and a fine church property. With plenty of refreshments there was also brought a fine set of Haviland china dishes for the minister and his wife.

—Will A. Green has just closed his third year of work at Kewanee, Ill. During his pastorate there have been added to the church more than 300 people. An indebtedness which had been increasing prior to his taking the work has been reduced to almost a minimum, and five young men have been led to prepare themselves for Christian work—three in the ministry and two in the Y. M. C. A. Owing to this panicky year many of the men having little employment, and more than 100 of the members moving from the city since January, the work has been very difficult, but with the opening up of the factories, it is believed that church work will progress wonderfully.

—Otis Hawkins has resigned at Lake Charles, La., to take effect Jan. 1. He does this on the advice of physicians, being compelled to go to a drier climate, but whether he has made any definite arrangements we have not been advised. He has done a good work at Lake Charles, which is a city of 17,000, where we have a good church building, parsonage and no debt. There is an active membership of about 200, a C. E. Society of some 50 members, a fine Sunday-school, with an enthusiastic teacher training class number ing 52. The church board is composed of men of the highest standing in every way, and they work as one man, writes Brother Hawkins, for the glory of God and the good of the church, assisting the minister in every possible way. A salary of $1,200 will be paid to an experienced man of ability. Those wishing to correspond should name the places they have served, and give references. C. E. Hickman or Brother Hawkins may be addressed.

—In another place we print a fuller report of the meeting held by Brother Breeden at Eureka, which possesses added importance because of its being held in one of our educational centers. This reminds us to say that we announced sometime ago the resignation of A. W. Taylor, to accept the pastorate of a church in Chicago. In obedience, however, to the wish of the church and the business men outside of the church who expressed their wish in a petition, he has withdrawn his resignation and will remain with the Eureka church for the present. During his pastorate of six years, nearly 500 persons have been received into the church, about 200 of them by baptism. He has been an earnest supporter of our mission work, and during his term of service about seventeen thousand dollars have been raised by the church for that cause, and about the same amount for local purposes. His work outside of strictly church lines has made him many friends among the citizens of the town and community.

—Our congregation at Manhattan, Kan., has moved into new quarters. We have now a good stone foundation and basement, which will seat more than twice as many people as the old church. It makes a beautiful auditorium, and will be a suitable place for the Wilhite-Gates meeting in January. Judge J. N. Haymaker, of Wichita, spoke on the occasion of the opening, delivering two great addresses. In the course of the day there were seven accessions to the church. As many of our readers know, Judge Haymaker is much interested in religious work, and is a member of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society. He congratulated the church on the step they had taken, and advised them to complete their building at the earliest possible date. W. T. McLain, the pastor, has undertaken to raise a thousand dollars, and the judge headed the subscription list as one of ten men who would give $100.

Restoring the Practice of Christianity.

After a hundred years, no one seems able to detect any material mistake in our effort to restore the doctrines and ordinances of the New Testament Church. Now if we could as clearly and fully restore the practice of Primitive Christianity, we should speedily bring all the world to accept the doctrines and ordinances.

For instance, the Savior said, "When thou makest a feast, bid the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed." Luke 14:13, 14. Let those who are engaged in the Restoration movement celebrate its Centennial at this Christmas season by unanimous obedience to this injunction of our Lord!

To fill up the gaps, round out the corners and cover the exceptions, let us all invest a little in the funded fellowship which is administered by the National Benevolent Association. This syndicate of mercy has so well carried out the wishes of its stockholders and their Lord that every Disciple of Christ should promptly become a shareholder in both the work and the blessing.

A Bible College at Vigan.

In recent years the Foreign Society has established Bible colleges at Tokyo, Japan, Nanking, China, and Jubbulpore, India. These have proved marvelous instruments of good.

The next task is a Bible college at Vigan, P. I. Only a few years of labor in that field result in about three thousand converts, 34 churches and 171 native evangelists. This is one evangelist out of every 17 members.

Our colleges in this country are crying out for ministerial students. Our young preachers in the Philippine Islands cry out for a college. "In barefooted simplicity; with thumb-worn Testaments, they search out the people of God. They tell winningly the glad tidings; they baptize disciples, they inaugurate the Lord's supper and organize congregations."

When the college is once erected, it will be self-supporting. We already have the beginning of such a college at Vigan in a small rented building. Hermon P. Williams, our missionary at this place, states the possibilities as follows: "Our proposition is to enlarge the college at Vigan, to buy a farm, build suitable houses and provide an equipment. We would make it an industrial school for evangelists, where the preachers and teachers may come, support themselves by their own labor, and learn in their own language the further counsel of God. They can make brick and erect for the school large, permanent buildings; and they can learn handicrafts that will enable them to reproduce the example of Paul the Tentmaker among their own villages. In this way every dollar spent from America would buy its full value in each of these benefits. It would build up a permanent college plant; it would develop a higher standard of thrift in our Christian communities; it would provide a numerous, trained and self-supporting ministry for our churches."

Now is the nick of time in the Philippines. The missionaries and evangelists are welcome everywhere. The people read the Bible and religious literature with eagerness. A trained force of native preachers means a marvelous growth of the church and a speedy evangelization of the islands.

It will cost $25,000 to establish this college. The friends of the work ought to provide this at once. We are hoping that some wide-awake, enterprising Disciple will suggest in each community steps to be taken to aid in this great enterprise. This is one of our Centennial gifts. We hope a number of people will give $500 each; some even larger amounts.

To Disciples Coming South for the Winter.

One who has on four different occasions visited the Golden West, extending his line of travel so far beyond our setting sun as to hail the rising sun of another clime; who has lived in Australia, New Zealand, England; who has sojourned in half a dozen American states; who has summered in Tasmania and sampled the climates of a number of European countries famous for that particular thing, may, I think, with becoming modesty claim to be something in the nature of a climatic expert. Assuming that my claim is allowed, I wish to express the opinion that it would be difficult, in any part of the world, to find a better all-year-round climate than that of the California coast, especially the strip lying on the Pacific Ocean north of Los Angeles and south of San Francisco; and it would be still more difficult to discover a better winter climate than that of the Florida highlands, in which Eustis is situated. I have been spending the summer in California, and have quite recently made the long journey from the Santa Clara Valley to this place. Investigation and experience convince me that the winter climate, par excellence of North America, is that of the Florida Peninsula. Surely nowhere in creation is the air so inexpressibly balmy, bracing and pure—so almost divine! It caresses one like the touch of a mother; it possesses a peculiar softness and restfulness that can not be described or imagined. To be sure, Florida is not so good a place as California for mere money making, but, all things considered, this part of the state, at least, is a better place for a home, if one have some means. Eustis, so far as I know (and various members of my family have lived in seven different towns in the Peninsula), is the most desirable resort in the far South. While not so loud and costly as the coastal towns, it has a better climate and is more healthful; while the facilities for a "good time" are ample. The altitude of the town above sea level is about two hundred feet, said to be a greater elevation than that of any tourist resort of importance in the state. It is forty or more above the neighboring water. It stands on a system of four big interconnected lakes, has a fine pleasure fleet of fifty launches or more, and is about to erect a public pavilion in the lake in front of the town. Fishing and hunting are plentiful.

I have no ax to grind in telling about Eustis. I have no real estate to sell and not even a room to rent. But I would like to see more of our people come this way. For, in addition to the climate and the scenery and the general advantages, we have an elegant Christian church, which was founded by W. K. Pendleton. So many of our brethren come South, and go to places that can not compare with this section for physical conditions, and where we have no church at all, when they might come here, enjoy first-class church privileges and find a country that combines a greater number of attractions for the health and pleasure-seeker than any in Florida. If this article should meet the eye of any who meditate a trip hither, I wish to assure them that they should call in and see how they like the place in any event. As a winter home I can give it my unqualified recommendation.

Eustis, Fla. J. J. Haley.

Objections Answered at Hot Springs.

There is objection to the continuance of raising further funds for the Hot Springs work. It has taken a strenuous effort to advance the work to its splendid position, with a good lot paid for and excavated. The needs and possibilities are the same now as they were at the beginning. Why abandon it now? A new method of raising funds is being used by my wife, who is an invalid and feels that another year of this strenuous effort and worry will cost her life, yet she is unwilling to leave her post of duty. Her plan, which has brought out these objections, is as follows: She has been writing to our ministers' wives for names of consecrated women who could, if they wished, take one of her little subscription lists and circulate it among the members and gather up the dimes and quarters of the friends of a work like this. One man says: "I am opposed to so much being made out of the Hot Springs work. You should do as the rest of us, build your own church." Another: "I am going to let you build your own church or do without." Another: "The work has been hanging too long. You should abandon it." These are just samples, and I can not answer in full, but will state some facts:

There are 140,000 visitors annually to these springs, 25,000 of which are young men between the ages of 14 and 25 years. Sixty per cent are ill. Fifty-five per cent of the sixty per cent are ill with a malady I need not mention. They are crushed, heart-broken, ashamed and humiliated. With many who are proud and who have fallen so low it is the time for the poison bottle or the pistol. They are ill, sick in body, heart and soul. We have no Y. M. C. A., no public institutions of any kind for their amelioration. They must have diversion. They have heretofore found it in the gambling houses, in the theaters, in the saloons, of which there are sixty, and upon the race course. Those in trouble must have something to drown it. I hope to drown the troubles of these unwise and wayward boys with the gospel of Christ through the mission church we are trying to erect where they could be won to Christ and sent home Christians. Two hundred and fifty thousand of these boys have gone through this city since I came here; 125,000 since I began trying to erect this mission church. One-half million go through here every twenty years. With some men such a work with such possibilities is of no importance.

As to the time the work has been on hand I plead guilty; but God knows whose fault it is. He knows who is to blame for it. That it ought to be abandoned for this season I say no, no, no! Nor will it be while I live and this church says stay. I will send the good wife away and fight it out alone.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Greenwich, Ohio.

The church at Greenwich enjoyed a most pleasant day at the occasion of the reopening of their house of worship. We had been out of our church home for about two months. We now have a good place to meet and worship. Our building has been enlarged by an extension in the rear of the church. This addition is so arranged that it can be used for separate class rooms or be thrown into one room for social purposes. The old part of the church has been beautified by redecorating the walls, varnishing the woodwork and recarpeting the floor. All helped in the work. The Christian Endeavor furnished the choir with beautiful oak chairs. The ladies' aid society made the work possible and gave largely. The cost of the work was little less than a thousand dollars, all of which has been provided for. Prof. Dear, of Hiram College, was with us on the day of reopening, and gave us two fine sermons. In the evening the other churches of the town joined us in the service, their ministers aiding in the services. The Bible school, Junior, Christian Endeavor, were all the best in a long time.

This day marked the close of my third year of service with this people, and we begin a new year with a fine fellowship and good prospects.

W. B. Slater, Minister.

Thanksgiving Echoes from Kentucky Mission Fields.

H. H. Thompson reports 15 baptism and 10 reclaimed in Pike county.——W. J. Cocke was in the field 22 days in November, added 13 and collected for Kentucky Missions $208.50. His meetings were at Pembroke and Rays Branch, having begun at former place in October. His work was paid for and a creditable offering made for Kentucky Missions aside from his compensation.——J. W. Masters added eight and is now at work in Harlan county, seeking to effect arrangements for Brother Robertson to give his time to that field. He will begin operations at Hyden, the county seat of Leslie County, on the second Sunday in December, with the purpose of organizing a congregation and building a house of worship.——During 25 days of the month W. J. Hudspeth preached 38 sermons and added 14, 13 by confession and baptism. He was in meeting at Sebree, Webster County, at time of report.—Robert Kirby added one during the eight days that he was able to be away from home and his sick wife.——Latonia has been enjoying the help of A. M. Harvuot in a meeting. There were some additions before he was compelled to leave—others later during preaching of the minister, Harlan C. Runyon. Some of the members added give strength to the situation.——Louis A. Kohler reports the work as doing very well at Bromley and it is felt that if the Board can help them a while longer the work will be able to care for itself.——Raymond G. Sherrer and the Jellico Church continue to work happily and hopefully together. He is supplying at Red Ash Sunday afternoons until a resident preacher can be secured.——C. M. Summers has closed his work at Jackson and expects to leave the state. We regret to have him leave Kentucky. He has sought to meet the needs of the difficult situation at Jackson and with some degree of success.——Twenty-eight baptisms and 22 added otherwise tell a part of the story of the results of the 28 days' work of D. G. Combs. He was at Bowen, Powell County, with six confessions in two days when last heard from.——J. B. Flinchum was patiently pushing the building enterprise at a point in Breathitt County during the past month.——H. W. Elliot was busy all the month at home and abroad. $987.76 tells the story of receipts. Only one of the "living link" churches has remitted and that in October—and the church at Harrodsburg. A goodly number of the congregations remitting have made decided advance and the indications generally are favorable for a general advance. Two district conventions were attended in Western Kentucky. We urge a prompt remittance of all offerings. A trip was made to Brandenburg Station, Meade County, in the interest of the house of worship, advertised to be sold Dec. 7, for a debt resting on it. Enough money was secured there to stay the proceedings and to get an extension of time for payment of remainder.——An appeal published in our papers a week ago brought responses from Mississippi, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas and Pennsylvania. Only one remittance by a citizen of Kentucky. Brother P. T. Cook, of Brookville, sent $5 and he is so far the only one in Kentucky who seems to want to save this house to the little band of 22 poor people at this Meade County village. The debt is not paid; we have just succeeded in getting more time, having paid part of the debt. Are there not many other friends who will help to save this church property now? Will not many Kentuckians send in from $1 to $5—or even $10 each?

H. W. Elliott, Sec. and Treas.

At Baltimore, Md.

For a little over seventeen years I have been the minister of one congregation, and in that time have held twenty meetings with the same congregation in which I did the preaching. My twenty-first meeting closed on November 22, with 105 additions, half of them being from new homes. Brother F. C. Huston, of Indianapolis, was my able and efficient assistant. He had charge of the singing, and in addition to his leading the chorus every evening he also sang a solo. His music was greatly appreciated and contributed largely to the results of the meeting. Fred B. Smoth, of New York, the well-known Y. M. C. A. speaker, spoke one evening to men only, at which service twenty-nine men decided for Christ. The Christian Temple has been greatly blessed and we are preparing for an aggressive winter campaign.

Brethren Taubman and Gardiner began on November 22 a meeting with Brother L. B. Haskins of Twenty-fifth Street. There have been several additions and we are looking for a great increase in that work. It is a fine field. Recently Brother H. F. Lutz, of Harrisburg, Pa., held a four weeks' meeting at Calhoun St. with Brother O. B. Sears, and there were 45 who made their decision for Christ, which made an epoch in that church and gave them great encouragement. Brother Nelson Trimble has started in a revival at the Christian Center, having services three nights a week, and there have been six additions to date. Brother B. A. Abbott has returned from Milligan College, Tenn., where he delivered a course of lectures. He stopped at Bristol for a short meeting with Brother Blake. Brother J. N. Pickering recently had several baptisms at Randall Street. Brother Jesse Dehoff is preaching at the Lansdowne Church. Several weeks ago a lot was given to us for the Wilhelm Park Church, and the building there will be started in the spring.

This is a great city that we have hardly begun to work. The Disciples have eight churches and missions and several colored churches, but there is room here for two dozen churches of the primitive faith. The harvest is ripe. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth laborers into His harvest."

Peter Ainslie.

BIBLE INSTITUTE.

To the Bible Student:
It may be your duty to PREACH
the unfathomed riches of Christ. The poignant need for preachers is a divine call to spiritual men who love God and to enter the ministry, to endure hardship for Christ and the lost, to become filled with the Bible,
THE WORD
THE STRONGEST FORCE
for the salvation of the lost. If too old to take a regular course, investigate the one year's residence plan of the Pastor's College. Send for catalog. The ministry is the best and most joyous calling and the Disciples are noted for their lucid unfolding of the sacred Word. We offer a synthetic survey of the whole Bible, in ten lectures and ten charts. Some churches have paid $100 for such a course and felt repaid. This Bible Institute conserves the best ideas of the Campells, adds some later, cleaves to the view of the Old Testament held by the Master and is as wide awake as the 20th Century.
IN THIS WORLD
THE PASTOR
can use this Institute (1) as a course of lectures, with its appeal to both Eyegate and Eargate, thus making the Book new to many. (2) As a solid, instructive introduction to a protracted meeting. (3) As a basis for weekly expositions, covering the Bible in three years.
THE EVANGELIST
will find it full of meat. It gives a clear understanding of the Bible as a unit, its plan, purpose and power; it brings out the strong evidence of prophecy; points out the inspired way of salvation; convicts of sin and of the absolute dependence on Christ; gives the true platform and method of Christian union; demonstrates the impregnable strength of our position and maps out the certain destiny of every hearer.
THE BEGINNER
ought to have this Institute for the abundance of deep truths by which we have won our victories, for the five books which lead to profitable and pleasant Bible study, for a graded road to the ministry. He can soon learn to preach, then support himself in school.

A minister wrote: "Your ideas are grand for the advanced minister—but can the young men understand?" It is the triumph of the teacher to bring the deepest ideas within the grasp of the student. However, when writing for circular, ask for a copy of our "Sublimest Drama of the Ages." If you can appreciate and enjoy the profoundest truths that ever thrilled the angels to wonder and to song, you can safely order the Institute.

The Pastors College, Champaign, Ill.

The New Church in Providence, R. I.

Nearly nine months ago Brother N. D. Webber came to Manton, R. I., from Boston to preach for our litle band of disciples. One-half of our active membership had gone to Providence, about four miles from us, and established another church. The wisdom of the move was doubted, and in our divided condition the outlook was dark for both churches. The Manton society is free from debt. The Providence brethren secured an up-to-date church house valued at over $5,000, furnished and all ready for use—everything practically new. But they had to run over $3,000 in debt, and they soon found that they could not pay the interest and floating debts and support a pastor, so for several weeks they have been without a pastor. Brother Webber has proved to be a unifier. Under his leadership the two churches have been led into a union for good works, and fraternal relations are resumed. Now the Providence church has called him to act as their pastor, and this month he begins to preach for both churches. The New England Missionary Board is in hearty sympathy with the work, and has voted substantial assistance to sustain preaching in Providence in 1909, but their fund is small and the immediate needs of the Providence work are many and pressing.

The brethren in Manton and Providence and Brother Webber personally are making great sacrifices to put the work in Providence on an enduring basis. Does our great brotherhood realize that this is the greatest door that has been opened to us in New England for a generation? Within 5-cent fare of Providence live 35,000 people. The lot and building have been secured for about two-thirds the cost. Thirty are already members. There is not one rich man or woman among them. Several are from the central states, some from the provinces, and some gathered from the denominations here. Will not some who have means help this important work? W. R. Forster, 238 Ohio Ave., Providence, R. I., is treasurer of the Providence church. He will gladly answer all letters of inquiry. Donations of large or small sums will be thankfully received by him and promptly acknowledged. Henry A. Blake.

Central New York Notes.

Since last writing, Bro. A. B. Chamberlain has been compelled, on account of failing health, to give up his pastorate at Throopsville, and has gone to Chicago to live with one of his children. We regret to lose him from our ranks and hope that the Lord may spare him for future usefulness. The church at Throopsville desires to locate a preacher. It is only four miles from Auburn, on an electric line, and offers a splendid opportunity for a college man to attend Auburn Theological Seminary, which ranks among the best in the country.——D. H. Bradbury and the church at Pompey are accomplishing a most gratifying work. Brother Bradbury is loved by all his people, and those not of the church as well. A short meeting, in which Brothers Serena, Stauffer and Braden assisted, resulted in fifteen confessions, and since the meeting closed several more have been added. Brother Bradbury has succeeded in bringing order out of chaos in this most difficult field, and is to be commended for his earnest efforts.——Brother Cleveland has closed his labors with the church at Cato. It is not definitely announced as to who is to be called, but we have heard rumors that one of our Central New York brethren would accept the pulpit.——During the last month Miss Eva Lemert, of Kansas City, has labored faithfully with the Sunday-school of the Central Church, of Syracuse. Many who know how difficult the city of Syracuse is as a field for our people, predicted that Miss Lemert would meet her "Waterloo" here, but such was not the case. A great victory was won. The faithful band of workers rallied around Miss Lemert, who is certainly a great leader, and during the month the attendance of the school was more than doubled and the enrollment increased by 102 names. On December 6 there were 302 present and an offering of $146, which is the high water mark in the history of nearly fifty years of the school and church. During the last month there have been a number of additions to the church, and a general evangelistic spirit permeates the congregation. Miss Meldrum has been engaged to assist Brother Serena in pastoral duties, and we believe we have a right to expect greater things from Central under Brother Serena's earnest leadership.——Brother Braden and the church at Auburn are preparing for special meetings during the month of January. W. C. Prewitt, of Niagara Falls, will do the preaching. The church is filled with expectancy along two lines: that there will be an ingathering of souls and that the spiritual life of the church may be deepened. We believe that they will have both gratified.——Word comes from Brewerton that Brother Burgan has resigned, to take effect March 1. We understand that Brother Burgan desires to go to a field in his native state. Brewerton is a difficult field on account of its being a lake resort, not far from Syracuse. A good man will be needed to follow Brother Burgan's earnest efforts.——A short meeting was recently conducted by home forces of the Rowland Street Church, of Syracuse. There were six added during the meeting, all adults and from new families, which does not record all that was accomplished. In a little over a year about seventy members were added to a membership of sixty, and the task of cementing all these into a substantial organization is no small one. Much was accomplished along this line and the congregation now stands ready to undertake what seems to be a herculean task indeed, but all know that our work is sadly hindered at the present time on account of lack of equipment, and are willing to sacrifice for greater things. The building committee is busy and hope to have plans completed soon. The average attendance of the Bible school during the last four weeks has been 135, which is the best in the history of this mission. C. R. Stauffer.

Breeden and Saxton at Eureka.

We have just closed a remarkable meeting at Eureka. The field was so well gleaned that many thought it a waste of time and money to attempt a meeting. There were not a dozen in the Bible school over 12 years of age out of the church, and there were but half that number in the college who were not Christians. There were but three Disciple families in the community not in the fellowship, and with a church of over six hundred members in a town of about 2,000 it looked like a useless task to many. But having faith in the power of the gospel unto the uttermost, we engaged the evangelists six months ago and began to prepare for the effort. The success of the effort was due to two causes:

In the first place, the church worked. Dr. Breeden said he had never had more enthusiastic workers nor a greater number of them. With such support in a large community he would have had hundreds of accessions.

In the second place, it was the power of great preaching that brought people to a decision. H. O. Breeden is a great preacher. He is eloquent, logical, and mighty in the Scriptures. He quotes the Bible much, and he does more, he applies it correctly. He is no legalist. He finds the spirit of the Word and he enforces it with a wealth of illustration. He knows men and he is no sensationalist. There was never a moment of excitement during the meetings. When the audience filled the house to overflowing, and the exhortation was most telling, no one was moved without deliberation. The preacher had appealed to the mind and the heart in the sermon, and the exhortation appealed to the will. Learning what to do, men were moved to do it. The result was that the accessions were largely adult and an extraordinarily large number of them men. No impossible task is left to the church and pastor in caring for the flock. He inspired the workers because he asked men to work with men in a manly way, and led them in the task. He is a tireless personal worker and a master in face to face talk with men. There were 110 accessions.

Prof. Saxton is a splendid leader of song. He gets the audience to sing, and his solos are both artistic and moving, and the whole tone of his work is in keeping with that of the evangelist. Alva W. Taylor.

Victory at Cheney, Kan.

I closed a month's meeting at Cheney, Kan., with a reception, three adults taking a stand for the church at the reception. Taking into consideration that Cheney has only 500 population, with two other churches than ours, we may call the meeting a great success. The success was largely due to the careful preparation of H. J. Myers, the minister. He had the membership splendidly organized and prepared for the work at my coming. And the work of John Williams, the leader of music, deserves the highest praise. His leadership of the choir and his solo work did much in winning souls for Christ.

At the beginning some of the brethren were pessimistic as to success, owing to the meeting which was held here last year by T. L. Faulders, at which time 81 were added to the church. However, the membership worked hard and faithfully until the very last, and our meeting resulted in 97 being added to the membership, plus the three that took a stand at the reception, making an even hundred. This number being one-fifth of the entire population of the town, makes the church the strongest there. As to the future of the church, we may look for still greater achievements under the energetic leadership of Brother Myers. The church is already planning to enlarge the building, this becoming necessary owing to the increase in membership.—Edward Clutter, evangelist.

A Great Work in Southwest Missouri.

The First Christian Church, of Neosho, Mo., was dedicated on Sunday, August 30, 1908, by H. O. Breeden, and an indebtedness of $15,800 wiped out, the keys to the handsome $26,000 edifice being turned over to J. M. Z. Withrow, chairman of the board of trustees.

The occasion was the most interesting, and at the same time the most thoroughly enjoyable, of any event that has ever happened in the history of the brotherhood at Neosho.

The Church of Christ filed papers of incorporation in Neosho on Thursday, November 4, 1880, with the county clerk, with the following board of trustees: E. J. Withrow, J. M. Lappin, Asa Carter, Hugh C. Armstrong, E. A. Carter, C. S. Roberts, Nathan M. Cox and John McElhany. A small church home was erected, seating perhaps 300 people. Here the Disciples worshiped for over twenty-five years, during which time the membership grew, but very slowly, and it was not until the coming of F. F. Walters, three years ago, that the church took on renewed activity and began to go forward in leaps and bounds, taking its place shortly among the progressive churches of the state. During Brother Walters' year with the Neosho church the membership was increased over 100, running up to 250 and going beyond the capacity of the old church building. It was then a new church home was planned and arrangements started for its building. Meantime Brother Walters received a call from the Central Church at Springfield, which he accepted. He has had even greater success in Springfield than he had in Neosho. The Neosho church then cast about for a man who could inspire the membership to greater things—a man who could organize, lead and direct the forces in a successful campaign for a new church. Fortunately J. W. Baker was secured, and eighteen months ago he took the leadership of the congregation. In getting Brother Baker we knew our man. He is a born leader and organizer. He had already built churches in Joplin and Duenweg, giving largely his personal means, besides his time and executive ability. We knew we would be successful when Brother Baker took the leadership. The splendid church home, with its fine equipment, which we have dedicated, was the culmination of Brother Baker's eighteen months of toil, of planning and of praying, aided and abetted in all things by a church board that got under the load and stood by him.

H. O. Breeden was secured to hold a week's rally services prior to and to have charge of affairs upon the day of dedication. Brother Breeden gave the people of Neosho a mental feast that opened their eyes, especially the church membership, so that when he explained his plan for raising the balance of the church indebtedness it was no trouble to get the money. After Dr. Breeden had delivered the dedicatory sermon, Brother Baker closed the services with a dedication prayer that was in reality a short thanksgiving sermon. He had seen the fruition of his hopes and prayers and labor. He had organized the forces, built and equipped the handsomest church home in Southwest Missouri, and he was happy, as he had a right to be. He had accomplished what the croakers said could not be done. As a church builder, organizer and leader of men, Brother Baker is a wonder, and he will succeed anywhere.

During the remainder of the day there were other enjoyable services which we have not space to detail. Dr. Breeden will long be remembered in Neosho, and will receive a hearty welcome should he ever choose to come this way again.

The new church home is modern and up-to-date in every way, and will seat 1,000 people. The present church membership is 400, and they are very proud of their new home, because every member contributed something to it, some members giving as much as $2,000.

Brother Baker has accepted a call and gone to Seattle to work as a state evangelist, and his good work here will surely follow him.

J. B. Hunley, of Colorado, has taken up the work here now and has been with us a month, and we find him to be pure gold. He is an eloquent, polished, brainy young man, and has made a fine start, while his wife, who is an accomplished singer, has already reached the hearts of the people. They make a strong team and are bound to lead the Neosho church into greater things.

E. L. Turner, Church Clerk.

DEDICATION.

Bowen, Ill.

The Bowen church and Brother W. A. Taylor, the minister, had me help dedicate their new building. The house was crowded at the morning service and there was $4,200 to raise, but the committee worked well, and the giving was free, and in about forty-five minutes it was all subscribed and the church dedicated.

This is one of the best planned houses I have seen, being a happy combination of the beautiful and convenient. It is built of brick, and finished in oak. There are, besides the auditorium, robing rooms, rest room, office, lecture room and below a well-finished basement with plenty of conveniences. The lighting is by gas plant. The house would do credit to a city.

Of the preachers present there were the Pierce brothers and Brother Sapp, of Canton, Mo., and Brother George H. Chandler, of Youngstown. Brother Chandler presided at the communion and the other brethren made short talks.

Brother Taylor, the minister, lives on a farm nearby, teaches school and preaches for the church. He led the building project both in pushing and giving, and he is greatly honored by all his neighbors. He is entitled to be proud of this heroic achievement.

Lawrence, Kan.

The church at Lawrence, Kan., dedicated their new building on the second Lord's day in December, the 13th. F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was in charge of the dedicatory services.

Brethren all over the state of Kansas are interested in the efforts of the Lawrence church. The State University brings each year into Lawrence nearly two hundred of the younger members of the Kansas churches. This makes the success of the Lawrence work of vital interest in many Kansas homes.

The church in Lawrence was organized January 12, 1884, and the dedication of the new building, in a way, will be a celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the work. Elder Henry Newoy was one of the first elders and has been a great factor in keeping alive the congregation during the twenty-five years of struggle. In 1887, Brother W. T. Williamson, now at Edwardsville, paid the balance of the debt on the old building at the corner of Kentucky and Quincy Streets, in which the congregation worshiped until about eighteen months ago, when it was sold to the Friends. Brother Williamson's generous act came at a time of deep discouragement and greatly helped and stimulated the brethren. Twelve ministers have served the church, but in the early years the pastorate was vacant for months at a time. Minister C. L. Milton is now serving his fifth consecutive year, and during that time the growth of the church has made possible the magnificent building that will be dedicated on December 13

The new building is a model in every respect. The needs of the Bible school, especially, have been kept in mind in its construction. Twelve separate class rooms are available, and several more can be readily constructed when needed. The main auditorium and the Bible school annex, separated by large folding doors, can both be used on occasion, furnishing seating capacity of nearly 1,000. The interior finish of the auditorium proper is weathered oak, with pews to match. The lighting scheme is elaborate. The building is heated by steam. The total cost was $35,000. It is a beautiful structure, and the Lawrence brethren are anxious for a large number of visitors from outside the city on dedication day.

George O. Foster.

Fayette, Ohio.

Sunday, December 13, was a red-letter day in the history of the Church of Christ of this place, for on that day occurred the dedication of their new and beautiful church edifice, erected and furnished at a cost of $14,000. It was a day that had long been looked forward to by the members and friends of the church, not only with bright hopes and anticipations, but with marked anxiety as well; for upon its success or failure rested, largely, the encouragement or discouragement of this little congregation.

The church was filled to overflowing and many were turned away at each service, both day and evening. The dedication services were in charge of President Miner Lee Bates, of Hiram College, who gave two great sermons, the one in the morning on "The Old and the New" and in the evening on "The Manliness of Jesus." From start to finish this gifted and consecrated man of God, though speaking to people in crowded and very uncomfortable positions, secured and held their earnest attention and sympathy. There was a debt of $3,500 to be provided for, all of which was easily raised in money and pledges, much to the surprise and delight of all. President Bates is certainly proving himself a great success, not only as a college president, but as a dedicator of churches, and will be in greater and greater demand in proportion as he becomes known to the churches.

The large, well-drilled chorus, under the able leadership of Fred A. Harvey, of Adrian, Mich., rendered beautiful and inspiring music, and were ably supported by an orchestra of talented musicians under the directorship of George W. Punches. These singers and musicians were in part from other churches and societies, and showed the best of fellowship and helpfulness, for which the church feels deeply grateful. To the pastor, Arthur J. Welty, special credit is due. From the day the old church burned to the present time, this earnest Christian minister has given his entire time and energy to the work of restoring our church home, out early and late securing pledges; as a member of the building committee throwing himself into any gap where he was most needed.

[Our correspondent then gives the history of the church, which was organized in 1882 with eleven charter members, building its first home in 1886, enlarging it in 1906, and then losing it by fire on February 2 of the present year. The church has secured a new lot and erected its present building of red stock brick, George W. Kramer, of New York, being the architect. The building has a basement underneath it, where the social life of the church is carried on. We regret that our space forbids us to give our brother's description of the building. In conclusion he says:]

"We rejoice that our congregation is again so nicely housed and equipped, and pray that we may never forget that the one great mission of the church is to win souls to Christ and train them in Christian service."

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Fort Smith, Dec. 15.—There were nine additions here Sunday—one by confession. There have been 25 the past two months, which I regard as an auspicious beginning for my ministry.—Edward B. Bagby.

Bentonville, Dec. 14.—Three additions at our regular morning service yesterday. We are to have a grand rally and roll call December 27. A splendid program has been provided. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST forces are cordially invited. Come, help us plan great things for 1909.—J. W. Ellis.

Hot Springs, Dec. 17.—Our meeting with Percy G. Cross, of San Antonio, as leader, closed last week with 70 additions, including 52 adults and two over 70 years of age. Brother Cross has been with us four Lord's days and our work has been greatly strengthened. There are some things I wish to say about Brother Cross, not for his sake, but for the sake of the cause, and of churches and preachers who are looking for an evangelist. Having been a preacher for 25 years I have had many men hold meetings for me, but I have never had an abler exponent of the Bible than this young evangelist. He is the most proficient man in the scriptures I have heard, and is as true as steel to the Book and plea. He held us the best meeting we ever had in Hot Springs, and did so in the little old church house seating only 180 people, and at the end of the street car line. But into the house we packed about 250 people each night, and turned away more for want of room. Had we been in a well-located building of larger seating capacity the result would have been a very large ingathering. I have never worked with a more agreeable man than Brother Cross. He strengthened me with my own people and left us all happy and determined to work. He is destined to become one of our greatest soul-winners.—T. N. Kincaid.

California.

Oxnard, Dec. 11.—Our meeting is progressing nicely. Six additions last night—15 to date. Good audiences and deep interest. This is a hard field and the Catholic church has a membership of 1,800. The gospel, however, is winning its way into the hearts of the people, and we are getting some of the best material in the city. E. N. Phillips is a great soul. He is a true yokefellow, and it is a joy to work with him in bringing souls to Christ. Since he took the work, under very discouraging conditions, he has been preaching on the spirit of our plea, leading up to the efforts we are now making, and from the present outlook we are going to have a great meeting, for this place. We expect to continue several weeks longer. I will have my helpers, Rolland Davison and his wife, with me the last two weeks of the meeting.—John T. Stivers, evangelist.

Canada.

Ridgetown, Ont., Dec. 3.—Since taking charge of the work here last Easter we have had four additions by baptism. Every department of the work is fairly prosperous.—T. J. Reed, minister.

Colorado.

Greeley, Dec. 7.—We have been here two months, coming from Fort Worth, Texas, the first of October. We have had 38 additions to the church during this time, and things look promising for a good work.—A. E. Dubber.

Illinois.

Minonk, Dec. 9.—Dr. William Thompson leading our revival. The house was crowded last night and we may have to go to the opera house. Dr. Thompson is a great evangelist and Brother Manie is a fine personal worker. Pray for the success of our meeting.—F. M. Morgan, pastor.

Kewanee, Dec. 8.—H. J. Reynolds, of Camp Point, Ill., has just closed a series of meetings here with nine additions. These meetings will have a lasting effect and we expect a number of additions in the near future as a result. Brother Reynolds is a good, sound gospel preacher.—Will A. Green.

Astoria, Dec. 10.—A. I. Martin, of Astoria, Ill., recently closed a short meeting at Summum, with 32 accessions—all but five by primary obedience.

Clayton, Dec. 5.—W. H. Pinkerton is here in a meeting. Brother DePew will follow up with a Sunday-school rally.—J. H. Brooks.

DuQuoin, Dec. 7.—One addition here since last report, and four at old DuQuoin schoolhouse.—George W. Wise, pastor.

Greenville, Dec. 11.—The church here closed a successful meeting last Monday evening with 29 added to the membership. The preaching was done by the pastor. This was my third meeting with the church here. Miss Lucile May Park led the song service.—Ivan W. Agee, minister.

Effingham, Dec. 11.—We are continually growing under the pastorate of W. B. Zimmerman. Eight additions since last report—4 by confession, 1 from the Baptists and 3 by letter.—Bess Prather, clerk.

Colfax, Dec. 11.—T. Alfred Fleming, of Cleveland, O., assisted me in a three-weeks' meeting here which resulted in 66 additions—47 by confession and baptism, 30 being heads of families. Every department of the church is in a healthy condition.—Norman H. Robertson, pastor.

Metropolis, Dec. 12.—Our meeting here has attracted large audiences. There were 25 additions—19 confessions. We are working at a great disadvantage. There has been no pastor for months, with church troubles and an opposition meeting.—Hamlin and Daugherty.

Bushton, Dec. 14.—Twenty-four here in 11 days. The interest and music fine. O. J. Marks, director, is fine in personal work. Van Camp's visit last Monday night was an uplift. J. A. Lytle is the pastor here.—E. A. Newby.

Summum, Dec. 14.—The meeting with A. I. Martin here closed with 27 confessions and five otherwise.

Indiana.

Shelbyville, Dec. 12.—We closed a short meeting of 15 days here with 22 added. Three have come since, making 25 not reported—eight by baptism and the remainder by relation or letter. E. L. Day, of Brazil, did the preaching and J. W. Tapp, of Ladoga, did the singing. Both are fine workers, and much good was done.—J. P. Myers, minister.

Middletown, Dec. 14.—The meeting here closed with 32 accessions to the membership of the church—24 baptisms, three from other religious bodies and five by statement and letter. F. E. Trucksess was with us two weeks, but we continued two weeks longer with home forces.—L. E. Murray.

Harrodsburg, Dec. 11.—The protracted meeting here closed on Monday night with a splendid sermon and good results. Robert N. Simpson, of Lexington, told the old story of the cross simply, beautifully and effectively. He spoke for his Master, both in and out of the pulpit. As a result of the meeting 55 have been baptized—another to be baptized shortly—and 31 otherwise. Our church has been greatly strengthened, and will long remember this good meeting.—Horace Kingsbury, minister.

Latonia, Dec. 12.—A. M. Harvuot, of Cincinnati, has just closed a most profitable meeting here with 17 added—14 by confession. The church was greatly helped by the strong scriptural sermons of Brother Harvuot and we believe their influence will be felt for a long time to come. We are still seeing results from this meeting. There were two more confessions last night. The Sunday-school is growing, and the audiences increasing, and everybody happy.—H. C. Runyon.

Sharon, Dec. 15.—During the past year S. E. Hendrickson devoted one-fourth of his time to the church at Hazelton, resulting in 15 additions. They expect to hold a revival prior to employing a man. He will devote his entire time to the work at Sharon the coming year, where there were 118 added during the past year. One hundred and four of these were added during the Newby meeting, doubling the membership.

Strawn, Dec. 16.—H. J. Kennedy, of Esbon, Kan., is with me in a meeting here. Splendid interest. Five confessions to date.—A. B. Moore.

Havensville, Dec. 12.—The meeting here continues. God is with us. Up to date there have been eight additions. Last night there was one confession and three or four stood up and said they wanted to become Christians. The field has been very closely gleaned by other meetings held here. Very few unconverted attend the meeting. Bert Bentley, our singer, has been detained at home about a week on account of the illness of his wife. The church has been greatly encouraged, strengthened and built up in the faith.—J. P. Haner, evangelist.

Dodge City, Dec. 14.—Two additions last night.—one from the Methodists and the other by statement. This makes 32 added at regular services since I took up the work here in June. The Sunday-school has almost trebled its attendance and the C. W. B. M. has more than trebled its membership. Every department is flourishing greatly.—M. Lee Sorey, minister.

Mound Valley, Dec. 7.—We began a meeting with Leon V. Stiles, of Cherryvale, assisting. There was one by letter last night and one by confession and two by statement to-night. The prospects are good for a fine meeting and a large ingathering.—Will I. Slater.

Concordia, Dec. 12.—Last Wednesday night we closed a meeting of five and one-half weeks' duration, which resulted in much good. State Evangelist O. L. Adams did the preaching and Louis Epler had charge of the music. Both are earnest and efficient workers. There were 12 additions—eight by letter and statement and four by confession and baptism. One of those came to us by statement and all four of those we baptized came from other religious bodies.—Harry G. Hedden, minister.

Cherryvale, Dec. 13.—The work swings along nicely. The Christian church is becoming more popular all the time. Four confessions yesterday; six baptisms last night. A Senior Christian Endeavor has been organized.—Leon V. Stiles, minister.

Indianapolis, Dec. 9.—Our meeting at the Seventh Christian Church continued four weeks, and resulted in 108 additions to the church—70 confessions and 20 from other faiths. E. A. Blackman conducted the music. He is an excellent leader and co-worker.—Clay Trusty.

Scottsburg, Dec. 10.—We are here with D. L. Milligan in a fine meeting. Auditorium packed and deep interest developing. This church has a fine lot of earnest, consecrated disciples, and they are at work. We had several confessions the first week. I expect to begin with Brother Barbre at Rockville, Ind., December 30.—C. E. Shultz, New Castle, Ind.

Kendallville, Dec. 7.—Six additions not previously reported—three by letter, one restored and two baptisms. We are a busy and happy church.—A. B. Houze.

Pleasanton, Dec. 15.—The good effects of our meeting are still manifested. One young man reclaimed Lord's day.—O. A. Ishmael.

Iowa.

Charlton, Dec. 14.—Two more members were taken into fellowship on last Sunday. There are quite a number of new names upon our Christian Endeavor list. The Bible school and all other departments of the church are looking up.—C. E. Wells.

Des Moines, Dec. 14.—The report of the Des Moines ministerial meeting is as follows: Central (Idleman), one confession and two by letter; University (Medbury), three by letter and one confession; Capitol Hill (Van Horne), four confessions.

Palmyra, Dec. 14.—The union meeting in progress here two weeks with 80 accessions, nearly all being confessions. Members of all the churches, including the Christian church, co-operating. I am having excellent support in the music. We close here December 23. I sing next at Atlantic, Ia., beginning January 3. Home address, Ruskin, Neb.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Barry, Dec. 14.—Four additions here yesterday and great audiences.—W. H. Kern.

Cuba, Dec. 11.—Last Sunday we closed our second meeting in 1908 with Evangelist John R. Golden. There were 40 additions, making a total of 110 since January 1, who have come in the two meetings and the regular work during the year. The last Sunday Brother Golden raised nearly $200 for current expenses, thus leaving the church in splendid shape. I consider him to be one of the best evangelists in our brotherhood, a strong preacher and fine character.—A. I. Zellar, pastor.

Waterloo, Dec. 9.—C. L. McKim, minister of the Oelwein church, and myself exchanged meetings this year. He assisted me last June for 22 days with 25 added. Just closed a meeting at Oelwein, with 38 added. Both churches and ministers were very well pleased with the results in every way. I found Brother McKim and his wife excellent co-workers.—Noah Garwick.

Exira, Dec. 8.—We have just closed a three-weeks' meeting here with 15 additions—all by primary obedience save one young man who came from the United Brethren Church. The Congregational and Methodist Episcopal ministers were with us every evening, and in every way encouraged us. J. S. Miller, of Edison, Neb., did the preaching and L. W. Ogle, of Paris, Texas, did the singing.—C. A. Polson, pastor.

I must have a few days' rest. School teachers, professional men and merchants among converts; number of strong men and heads of families is most remarkable. Brother Grafton is one of America's very greatest pastors. This is the greatest second meeting that we have any knowledge of. We have had unlimited joy in this great meeting and have aroused the whole country round about. Pastors and delegates have come from near and far. Hard to get people to definite acceptance by confession and baptism. For local reasons the board thought best not to announce the meetings until just beginning. This is always a mistake. It leads to lack of proper introduction of evangelist and prevents effective preparation. Spite of it, wonders accomplished in the month. Meeting is the talk of entire city. Raised nearly a thousand dollars in a few minutes to-day. Joseph Craig ideal pastor and greatly beloved. Leroy St. John fine director and soloist.—Herbert Yeuell.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

THE LAST PROMISE AND THE LAST PRAYER OF THE BIBLE.

Topic for Dec. 30. Rev. 22:20, 21.

As we grow older the years seem to slip away faster and faster, until they fairly fly. There is something pathetic in this passing of the years into eternity. If death ends all, as the fatalist would have us believe, then the end for all of us now living is very near. The creed of the agnostic and of the full-fledged fatalist is certainly a hopeless and helpless one. Pity the pessimism of the man bereft of the hope of the Gospel. No matter how poor one may be, with hope in the heart life may still be full of good cheer, since the Christ has left us among his parting messages this word: "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." The dear Lord help us to remember this during the new year just dawning o'er the hills of Hope. To look steadfastly into the future, realizing the shortness of all our earthly lives and the futility of much of our endeavor, however strenuous, while holding fast our faith in the ultimate triumph of the truth over error, of life over death, is the manly and Christian thing to do. To do this is to come at last to realize the meaning of the great Apostle's declaration: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." The beloved John came to this realization only through years of struggle. And this faith must center in the person of the Christ. "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" All minor matters of speculation or of opinion sink into utter insignificance beside the one great problem of Jesus and the eternal life, which he came to declare. "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life." (1 John 5:13.) And yet we spend our lives in squabbling over the things that bring us neither profit nor peace. If the Gospel of Christ had done nothing else for the world than promote and proclaim the spirit of optimism it would deserve well of all lovers of good. The optimism of the Christ is one of the most remarkable things in the life that he lived and the teaching that he gave to the world. The commission given to his disciples to go into all the world and make disciples of all nations, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them, is the most optimistic in its outlook upon the world of any message ever given to men. He must have been the Son of God since he had the vision of the Son of God. Surely he was divine in a sense in which no man of might in all the centuries could claim. And the world to-day can account for his marvelous influence on no other rational ground than that he was the Son of God, declared to be such by the life that he lived, the death that he died, and by the fact of the resurrection, attested by many infallible proofs, by those who companied with him, both before and after that event. The writer of the fourth gospel and of the Revelation declares of himself: "This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things: and we know that his testimony is true."

The promise of the soon coming of the Lord seems to some o'erlong delayed. Nevertheless the promise of God standeth sure; the Lord knoweth them that are his. And in this assurance we can rest, while we toil on with right good cheer, abiding his time. And as we say farewell to the old year, let us renew our faith and hope, and pray, as we suffer and serve, "Even so come, Lord Jesus."

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Why the Organized Adult Bible Class Succeeds.

BY C. D. MEIGS.

The word "success" is written in great big letters all over the "New Movement," and it means just what it says. It is not so much "Evolution," as it is Revolution and Revelation, in Sunday school work! No new thing in Bible school work ever took on bigger or better wings in so short a time. It is indeed a "movement," and a new one, too, and a movement toward and into the church. It is far-fetching and far-reaching, and full of wondrous promise. Once the question of how to get the grown people into the Bible school is fully solved, the question of how to hold the young people, how to get enough teachers, and how to secure parental co-operation, which are perhaps the three most difficult Sunday school problems, will be solved at the same time and by the same process.

Now, as the advertisers say—"There's a Reason," and the reason for this great success lies in the one word "Organization."

Men love organization; so do women; so do children. I recently heard of a half dozen or more young boys who formed a "Secret Organization"—fully officered, and bearing the proud name of "The Midnight Prowlers"! And this notwithstanding the fact that every brave and fearless member was safely and snugly tucked into bed by his mamma at night when the curfew tolled at 9 o'clock. Fortunately "the midnight prowlers" did not set the world on fire, but certainly the name they selected showed their lofty ambition!

Yes, men love organization—there's no denying that—and at last the church has recognized it and has been wise enough to say—"Well, Gentlemen-Ladies; if it is organization you want, we will give it to you right here in our Bible school" and the men are nobly answering, by thousands, and the women, too, "All right, we will take that; for it is the best proposition you ever made us. Why didn't you do it long ago?"

Now, not every man will join the Odd Fellows. But thousands will and do. Not every man will join the Masons. But thousands will and do. Not every man will join the "Elks." But thousands will and do. Not every man will join a Bible class. But thousands will and do. All you have to do is to get after many of them and come back with a lot of them!

There are two reasons why men love organization.

1. Because the organization really does something for them, which they think is worth while, and 2, because they do something for the organization, which the organization thinks is worth while, and that man who loves it the most is the one who does the most for it, and this, I take it, is the secret of the success of the whole blessed movement. But this is only the secret of success; the reason for it is the work that is done, and the success that is won for, as we all know, "nothing succeeds like success!"

Men are perfectly willing to waste a moderate amount of time in what they are pleased to call recreation, but men who are men are not willing to give even Sunday time in efforts that bring no visible results. Who ever saw any results well worth a busy man's while, from an old-fashioned, slow-going Bible class that meets in the amen corner, and hasn't had a sinner in it, nor a new member, for the past three years, and has lost more members than it has secured? That is merely an effort to "save the saints," who claim to have been saved a quarter of a century ago! You put a live, active young man in a class like that, a fellow who believes in doing things, and can do them himself, and how long do you reckon he'll stay?—Adult Bible Class Monthly.

Organized Classes at Mexico, Mo.

I stopped off at Mexico for Sunday-school and church on Sunday morning, November 8, and looked in on their great organized classes. The marvel of the city is the Twentieth Century class and the Mexico Men's class. These, with four other classes of the school, are organized up to international standards. The Twentieth Century class is a mixed class and has been running along with an attendance of from 12 to 20 per year. It was organized with the rest at a special meeting on July 31. On Sunday the enrollment was 142 and they expect to have 200 by Christmas. The Men's class has come into existence since July 1, and is made up of men who were not in any way connected with any school. On Sunday there were nine new members added to the class, making the membership 87. President Jesse said that they had expected to reach 100 by January 1, but since it would only require 13 more new members to reach that number, they would have to make a new standard and ask that the class work for 150 by that time.

The other organized classes are doing well, having doubled or trebled their attendance. The whole school has grown splendidly this summer and fall. The attendance the Sunday before was 412 and they rejoiced because of the victory. But last Sunday it was 465. They say they will go into the 500 list next Sunday with over 700 enrolled. They expect to have 1,000 enrolled by January 1, and make the school a centennial school by April 1. Aside from the splendid work of Superintendent Dry and his coworkers, and the opportunities for growth and development offered by the organized class work, the most potent influence for growth is the pastor, Walter M. White, and it is not so much his personality as his practice. He hardly allows a service to pass that he does not talk Sunday-school. Why, he even preaches Sunday-school, devoting whole sermons to it, until the church members there have become convinced that it is the proper thing for a Disciple of Christ to study the Bible.

The splendid growth of this school is to be accounted for in a single word—W-o-r-k. The superiority in the organized class is found in the fact that it puts more people to work and in a more effective manner. It is a question of sowing and reaping, of cause and effect.

TEACHER-TRAINING.

DePew is After You Also.

Clarence L. DePew, of Illinois, knows that the first need of every school in the Prairie State is to have a trained teacher for every class. Week before last we published the list of schools in the Seventh and Eighth districts, which, as yet, have no training classes. This week we publish the remaining schools.

These schools might as well organize now as later, for Superintendent DePew never gives up. If you have a friend on the published list, write him and help. Let every school start the class January 1, 1909. Every school in Illinois should have a training class in the Centennial year.

ADAMS.

Thomas J. Adams was born near Doylestown, O., August 10, 1825, and passed away November 10, 1908, at the age of 83 years and 3 months. He was married to Miss Elesa Cleckner in 1846. Of this union there were six children, three of whom survive, with 18 grandchildren and 27 great-grandchildren. He was tenderly cared for in his declining years by his son Charles E. Adams, of Doylestown. He was baptized into Christ at the age of 18. I preached the funeral in the Union Church at Easton, O., which was largely attended.—Charles E. Taylor, Wadsworth, O.

BUCK.

At her home near Salida, Colo., Mary A. Buck, December 6, 1908. The funeral service was conducted at the home of the writer. The husband, son and daughter are left to mourn her death.—W. B. Crewdson.

GANNON.

Sarah Cook was born in Trumble county, O., in 1834, and died in Aberdeen, South Dakota, Nov. 11, 1908. She confessed Christ at fifteen years of age. She was a student under James A. Garfield in Hiram College. She was married to F. B. Gannon, July 2, 1872. Two sons were born, but both died in early childhood. In 1883 she and her husband removed to Ellendale, N. D., where Mrs. Gannon served sixteen years as cashier of what is now the First National Bank. She was a noble character, and was always ready to extend the kingdom of her Lord. She was a nonsectarian Disciple, her love and sympathies going out to all, especially to those who love the Christ. She was the founder of the church at Ellendale, N. D., both in a spiritual and financial way, and even during the years when there was no church her individual offerings went regularly to the mission boards. She filled the office of state president of the C. W. B. M. and was a faithful worker in every good cause.—F. B. Sapp, Aberdeen, S. D.

CANTERBURY.

Evans E. Canterbury died in Springfield, Ill., at the residence of his sister, Mrs. J. S. Cantrall, Sunday, November 15. He was born in Sangamon county, Illinois, in 1851, grew to manhood, married and began business there. At the age of 16 he became a Christian. In 1882 he went to Peoria and was there engaged for eleven years in the live stock commission business. He came to Chicago in 1893 and continued in the same business until failing health compelled his retirement in October, 1907. He served both the Peoria and Englewood churches very usefully as a deacon—the latter also as a trustee. He was a man of commanding physique, but was smitten down by Bright's disease. As his minister I was associated with him about twelve years. He was a man of commendable family pride, clean life, genial disposition and modest as a girl. His Christian faith was always steadfast and became richer as the end came toward him. His wife survives him. The funeral was conducted by the writer and F. M. Burnham. The burial was at Oak Ridge Cemetery. Our hearts are comforted by the promises of God.
Decatur, Ill. N. S. Haynes.

HICKS.

"Brother Hicks is dead." This was the whisper that fell upon the young wife's heart and made her gather her baby lad closer to her breast and moan out her wordless grief. It was the message that brought woe to the Mountain Grove church, and those of Pomona and Willow Springs, for he was the beloved pastor of them all. It was the cry taken up by the school children, for he was their teacher and friend, and it was a word full of the deepest pain to them. In all that community, and far and wide over Texas and adjoining counties, there was no man loved better than he.

Born July 25, 1877, dying November 23, 1908, he had only just passed the thirty-first mile stone on the way to the Celestial City. At 17 years of age he entered into the service of the King and soon began to exercise the gift the Lord had given him. Not satisfied with his equipment, in 1899 he entered Christian University and six years later graduated with the degrees of A. B. and B. D., loved by students and professors alike.

In 1900 he was married to Miss Lucy Bezoni, the daughter of the man, F. D. Bezoni, who had led him to Christ, he having himself been the agent, in God's hand, for the conversion of the woman he loved. One child, Gerald, came to bless and brighten their home, on whom he lavished all the affection of a father's heart.

Leaving college he could have gone to large fields with good remuneration, but he remembered the part of the state where he was born, its needs appealed to him, and he turned aside from all other enticements and settled in Mountain Grove, Mo., where for the last four years he has been teaching and preaching the kingdom of God. Never was a purer or more manly life. The chief ambition of his soul was to do and to be good. With a humility that revealed his fellowship with the lowly One, he, too, "went about doing good." He was to me as one of my own boys in the ministry of the grace of God. For thirteen days he battled for the life that was so dear to him and those he loved; he, however, was among the first to recognize the hopelessness of the struggle. He did not supinely yield, but fought on, yet making such preparation as possible for the end, should it come. Bravely, manfully, he faced the grim enemy and as the end approached he said, "Death draws nigh," and bidding goodby to the loved of earth, he was in the glory land. For the sweet young wife and the baby boy, for the aged father and mother, and the sisters, dear to him, we pray the dear Father's tenderest consolation.

"Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me,
There was no moaning at the bar,
When he put out to sea."
Kansas City, Mo. T. A. Abbott.

MELVIN.

Mrs. Elizabeth Melvin departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Leslie Lovitt, in Henderson county, Illinois, at the age of 82 years, 1 month and 12 days. She was the oldest daughter of John and Agnes Goodnight. She was born in Kentucky, but when a year old the family came to Monroe county, Indiana, where they lived for twenty-five years. Another move was made in 1853, to Henderson county, Illinois. There Elizabeth became the wife of William Melvin. Five children were born to this union, one of whom preceded her to the other land. The remaining four were near her when her summons came. In her closing hours her only surviving daughter lovingly ministered to her in her affliction. She was one of God's own. For sixty-five years she was a Christian not in name only, but in deed and in truth. Earth is poorer now, heaven is richer. No words of mine can speak her blameless, unselfish life. It is my blessed confidence that I shall see her again when all sin and dross and shadow are cleared away, and the redeemed shall behold the King in his beauty.—T. H. Goodnight.

PERRIN.

James Perrin passed to his reward on November 27. He had attended both services of the Christian Church at Thorntown, Ind., on the previous day. He was born near Barnstable, Devonshire, England, June 15, 1829, being 79 years, 6 months and 12 days old. He learned the shoemaker's trade in his youth and came to America when he was 20, locating on a farm near Dayton, O. Here he became the main support of the family. After serving in the war he settled at Thorntown, where, with his brother, he established a shoe business. In 1866 he married Narcissus Jane Wiley, and to them eight children were born—all living. In his early life he was a member of the Established Church of England, but on coming to America allied himself with the Disciples of Christ, whose simplicity of teaching and worship were more in accord with his ideas of freedom and democracy. He united with the Thorntown church under the preaching of A. I. Hobbs. He lived not for himself but for others, and simplicity and faithfulness were two outstanding characteristics of his life.

PRINTY.

Margaret E. Cameron, born December 4, 1831, in Sangamon county, Illinois, departed this life November 28, 1908, aged 76 years, 11 months and 24 days. She moved with her parents to Hancock county, Illinois, at the age of six months, where she has since resided. She was married to Moses F. Printy May 19, 1859. To this union were born five children, Mrs. Flora Bruner, living near Augusta; Mrs. Selma Cox, living near the old home; Herschel and Walter, still at home, and one that died in infancy. At the age of 18 she united with the Christian Church and lived a consistent Christian life until death. For twenty-five years she was a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. She was a woman of lovable character and of sunny and cheerful disposition throughout her long life. She was industrious, always ready to do her part, a friend to be trusted and a good neighbor. She was a true and faithful wife, a kind and affectionate mother. The funeral service, held in the St. Mary's Church on November 30, was conducted by Rev. Pierce, assisted by Rev. Sherman. The text, John 11:25, 26, was her own selection. She was laid to rest by the side of her husband in the Holland Cemetery. Heaven has greater treasure for those who most keenly bear her loss.

WHITE.

Lulu H. Sparks, born in Missouri May 26, 1859, passed to her reward November 16, 1908, at Ukiah, Cal. She was married 30 years ago to J. Q. White, now judge of the superior court of Mendocino county. She was a lovely character and very devoted to the church of which she had been a member most of her life. A great concourse of people was present at the services held in memory of her. She was patient through months of suffering.—O. Wilkison, Ukiah, Cal.

The Sweetest Message Ever Sent.

BY MOLLIE E. ELLIOTT.

On Judea's hills a gentle glow
Of trembling starlight fell,
And on the fertile fields below
Where flocks and shepherds dwell.
Suddenly a glorious light
O'erspread the pastoral scene,
The shepherds gaze with awe and fright
Upon its wondrous sheen.

Be not afraid, the vision said,
For I am sent to bring
The sweetest message ever sent,
Glad tidings of the King.
The Christ of whom the prophets told,
Is born to-day in Bethlehem.
The hope of earth, the joy of heaven,
God's gift to sinful men.

In songs of praise to God on high,
The rapturous triumph rang,
As heavenly host, through star-lit sky,
In concert sweetly sang.
Peace on earth, good will toward men,
The happy anthems ring,
Glory to God—good will toward men,
Let earth receive her king.

Christmas Carols Old and New.

The Christmas carol, as a feature of the holiday observances, is an English rather than an American custom, and the "waits," who sing them under the windows of English houses or on the street-corners, are quite unknown with us. Yet the Yuletide carol plays some part in the Christmas exercises of almost all our churches, one in particular, the favorite, "God Rest You, Merry Gentlemen," being used in all Episcopal churches. It is included in the hymnal, but lest anyone may have forgotten it, we give it here:

God rest you, merry gentlemen;
Let nothing you dismay,
For Jesus Christ, our Savior,
Was born upon this day.
To save us all from Satan's power
When we are gone astray,
Oh, tiding of comfort and joy,
For Jesus Christ, our Savior, was born on Christmas Day.

Curiously enough, carol singing at Christmas time came in part from heathendom. The Anglo-Saxon Gule, or Yule, was an ancient pagan festival, which in the wisdom of the early missionaries was retained with a new significance when Britain was Christianized. The season's merrymaking then had its influence upon the carols, which developed into two classes, one of joyous expressions of the Savior's birth, and the other singing of wassail.

Though carols are said to have been sung in the primitive church, the earliest one extant is of the thirteenth century. Its manuscript is now in the British Museum. It is written in Anglo Norman, and the first stanza, freely translated, is as follows:

Now lardings, listen to our ditty,
Strangers coming from afar,
Let poor minstrels move your pity;
Give us welcome, soothe our care;
In this mansion, as they tell us,
Christmas wassail keeps to-day
And, as the king of all good fellows,
Reigns with uncontrolled sway.

CHORUS.

Hail, Father Christmas, hail to thee;
Honor'd ever shalt thou be;
All the sweets that love bestows,
Endless pleasures wait on those
Who, like vassals brave and true,
Give to Christmas homage due.

Among the many carols of later date are many of exquisite beauty—Nahum Tate's "While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night," Isaac Watts' "Joy to the World, the Lord is Come," Charles Wesley's "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing," and Phillips Brooks' "Oh, Little Town of Bethlehem." Of another age are these Christmas verses of Robert Herrick, the quaint old English poet:

Tell us, thou clear and heavenly tongue,
Where is the Babe that lately sprung?
Lies he the lily banks among?

Or say, if this new birth of ours
Sleeps, laid within some ark of flowers,
Spangled with dew light? Thou canst clear
All doubts and manifest the where.

Declare to us bright star, if we shall seek
Him in the morning's blushing cheek
Or search the beds of spices through
To find him out?

Milton's "Hymn on the Nativity," must, of course, be ranked among the best Christmas songs, while the "Gloria in Excelsis," of the King James Bible, will always be sung wherever the English language makes its way.—Marion R. Bradley.

We are in simple faith to bring all our troubles to the Lord, and with the one desire—his glory—seek his help, knowing and finding him to be a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God.

For Mothers—and Fathers, Too.

Children need models more than criticism.

To bring up a child in the way he should go, travel that way yourself.

The sooner you get a child to be a law unto himself, the sooner you will make a man of him.

We can never check what is evil in the young unless we cherish what is good in them.

Stories first heard at a mother's knee are never wholly forgotten—a little spring that never dries up in our journey through scorching years.

There are no men or women, however poor they may be, but have it in their power, by the grace of God, to leave behind them the grandest thing on earth—character; and their children might rise up after them and thank God that their mother was a pious woman, or their father a pious man.—Dr. McLeod.

To Get Out the Spot.

"It takes more than one coat of white paint to cover up a black spot," said an old philosopher. And he applied the idea, too. "It's easy to spoil a reputation, an' hard to git it clean ag'in."

If it were only the other way round, how nice and easy it would be to be good. But the wise old man was right; and perhaps it is not so unfortunate, after all. If it were so easy to be good that no one had to make an effort, it would soon be a very tame affair. It is the fight, and struggle, and victory of it; the trying to win against difficulties, that strengthen our moral muscles and make us worthy victors in the end.

But in the fight care must be exercised unceasingly against getting the black spots of failure. They are hard to take out. They may not be glossed over, or painted over, for then they are bound to show through. The only way to get them out, when they are there, is through Him in whose name the warfare is waged, and for whom the reputation is to be made and kept spotless.—East and West.

THE BEST DAYS OF ALL

THOMAS CURTIS CLARK

THESE are the best days!
Stars were never brighter,
Hearts were never lighter,
Songs of birds and rippling brooklets
Never were more sweet;
There were never fairer flowers
Than those at our feet
In these fair days, these rare days,
The best days of all!

These are the best days!
Skies were never bluer,
Friends were never truer;
There was never less of sorrow,
More of joy and song,
Than we find beside our pathway
As we trudge along
In these fair days, these rare days,
The best days of all!

A Tramp's Christmas

By Edith Bradley

"Oh, my!" exclaimed Helen Lloyd, "there comes my tramp. Guess he won't know me. Hope he ate up the 'hand out' I gave him; really, he did look as if he were all in; glad I fed him. Guess he found work; he looks better all right. How can I ever pass him on this muddy crossing?" And just at that moment her feet slipped out from under her, and in two seconds a strong pair of arms lifted her squarely upon her footing, not much the worse for her fright.

"I beg your pardon, marm, I just could not help it; saved you an ugly fall; you are none the worse except for that heavy patch of mud on the lower part of your coat. I will take it off."

She faced her benefactor and beheld her tramp. He pulled a colored handkerchief out of his coat pocket and at the same moment something dark fell out, which he caught and held tightly in his other hand.

"Oh! I thank you, sir; never mind the mud. I think you dropped something out of your pocket just now." And on the impulse of the moment he stood up, opened his hand and revealed a little worn, brown baby shoe. He said:

"That, lady, is all I have on earth to help me, to comfort me; well, yes, I will say to live for, 'the memory of that little one,' for wife and baby are both dead, and I'm alone in this world. You see, I have to carry it where I can take hold of it to keep me from temptation. Twice, now, it has saved me on the very brink of a watery grave. I have been sober now over six months; haven't drank a drop of whisky. I just take hold of that litle shoe and I have to say, 'No, boys, not to-night.'"

Just here he wiped away a stray tear, and I wanted to do the same thing. I very hurriedly said: "I thank you, sir; take my card. I will write the name of my church on it, and I want you to come down to our meetings; we have a splendid evangelist, and I sing a solo every night. I will sing one for just you to-morrow night. Good-bye." And I hurried to get my car, as it was approaching. Comfortably seated, my mind wandered back to my experience with the man on the crossing. I must say I felt eager for the next evening's service, and really wondered if my tramp would be there. Oh! such need of the gospel throughout our land, to help just such suffering and dying humanity as he. To think that all he was able to call on in a time of weakness was the memory and love which that baby shoe ever gave out to him. He knew nothing of the loving Christ who is our ever-ready strength, our burden bearer, our all.

After a social call mother and I went to the meeting. There was a full house and I greatly rejoiced when the preacher announced as his subject for the evening, "What's to Hinder?" and then, in his impressive and earnest manner made a strong and forceful appeal to man "to let now be the decisive time." This strong and effective appeal to the higher natures and the manhood of his audience was marked by a fine piece of eloquence and reasoning which carried conviction. He well knew how to reach the hearts and produce a practical effect on his hearers. The sermon over and the solo announced, all was still. I arose to my feet. Not yet did I spy my tramp. Oh, how could it be that he should not have had this one special sermon! With a feeling of disappointment I took my music. I had just finished the first stanza when, in one of the back rows of seats, I discovered "my tramp." I sang as never before, inspired by the thought of saving a soul. The minister stepped forward and referred to the life of Saul of Tarsus in "The Heavenly Vision," which he had given us a few evenings before. Every modulation of his strong, magnetic voice perfectly attuned and accorded in every point with the character of the appeal. Again I sang, as never before, and behold, I saw "my tramp," standing. The pastor said, "Come forward! Christ is waiting for you." For a brief moment he hesitated; then he came down the aisle. The look of joy in his face told the story so well, and as the evangelist greeted him I saw a tear glisten upon his cheek. Several other converts followed, and after the benediction I went down to greet them. I said to him, "I am so glad to see you, and so happy that you have found a friend in Jesus, who never fails in time of need. Please tell me your name."

"My name is Jack Lynch. I am a carpenter, working in the machine shops. I thank you, Miss Lloyd, for your little card that brought me here. This is the second time you have befriended me. The first time I saw you I was hungry, homeless and penniless, and you gave me bread and money for a night's lodging."

The meetings continued for two weeks longer, and Jack Lynch was always there and on time. Sometimes he brought one or two men with him. One night he had two newsboys with him, and came down closer to the front. Soon I received a request to sing "Will Papa Be There?" and very gladly sang it. He seemed so interested in the boys that the evangelist told of a little girl who had been the means of leading many to Christ, when she went to her father's work shop at the close of day. Then another song followed and Jack Lynch came down the aisle with the two boys, who were about sixteen years of age, while after them came the man who was there with Lynch the night before. I felt as if I need never again worry about Jack Lynch; already he was into the work, all unconscious of how much it meant to his life. The following Sunday closed the meetings, with ninety-nine additions to the church. We gave a farewell reception to our evangelist, who had won many true and loyal friends while he was among us. I heard him ask Jack Lynch where he expected to spend Christmas this year.

"Well, pastor," said Jack, "I am going down to Brown county and visit my only brother and a schoolmate of mine, Bill Walters. Now I wish you would kinder pray for me, pastor. I had some trouble with my brother—Phil Lynch is his name—and I want to fix up the matter. I hope, too, to show Phil something substantial in this new life that I have found."

"All right," said the evangelist. "May God bless you, Lynch!"

It was a cold rain, with threatening snow, that greeted the passengers of the five o'clock train as they stepped out upon the platform of the station at Homewood. Jack Lynch pulled the collar of his overcoat high around his ears. Not seeing anyone in from the country neighborhood where his brother lived, he determined to walk out and take them by surprise. At nearly eight o'clock he opened the door of his brother's country home. The family was still seated around a spacious supper table. Two logs, in the open grate, sent out the only warmth of greeting he felt for a few brief moments. Then he said, "Hello, Phil! Come, old boy, let bygones be bygones, and let us fix up this quarrel and get right with each other and with God. Phil, I have found a Friend who never fails. He sent me out here to make this right, and help make this the best Christmas you and I have ever known. What do you say, Phil?"

"Well, Jack, what I see in you is too great to express in words, except I guess you have found mother's religion. She always prayed for us, but somehow I never expected to see her prayers answered. When did you get this? Say, come set up to the table and have some supper. Forgive you, Jack? Why, yes, God bless you! And I think I'll wait no longer for some of the same sort of religion. I have always intended to make the start some day, and now that I see you a new man, I can't let you go alone. Let us make this the best Christmas of our lives, old boy!"

And they each took care of a stray tear, a joyful tear, as they clasped each other's hand, while the angels in heaven sang "Peace on earth, good will to men."

How many are in the inn where Christ is born, yet they know nothing of the glory. —G. H. Morrison.

THE TRIUMPH SONG

By Cora S. Day

It was a hard day in the office of The Weekly Reflector. Miss Allie Nichols had known it would be before she had been in the office five minutes. It was press day, for one thing, and press days always were hard. And in addition Mr. Wyse, the assistant editor, who called Alice his private secretary, had come in with a frown on his brow that boded ill for all who came in contact with him that day. The office force knew his frowns, from long experience, and knew what to expect.

Several things went wrong. Some mistakes were made in the press-rooms, and the frown deepened until it looked as if the pent-up thunder and lightning of his wrath might roll and flash at any minute. There had been several flickering outbursts—"heat lightning," Alice called them to herself and to the foreman of the press-rooms, with a brave attempt at light-heartedness. He had happened down when she was alone for a moment in the great and disgruntled man's office. The foreman grinned sympathetically, in spite of his own troubles.

"Oh, you must not get down-hearted over the old man and his little ways. When he really gets a little age and the wisdom of experience, he won't take things so to heart," he said, comfortingly, at sight of the girl's tired, nervous look.

"I know. But it is hard on me. While he is aging and getting the experience, I feel that I am doing the same," she said, and the smile that went with the words was a rather weary one.

"That is so. It is pretty hard for you. I am out of sight and hearing of him most of the time, but you have to stay right here at his beck and call. I don't think I'd care to trade jobs with you," and he hurried away at the sound of the approaching footsteps of the assistant editor.

Although he called her his private secretary, Alice mentally and in the bosom of her family called herself the maid of all work. She had charge of all the assistant editor's large correspondence. She had a book review department to look after. She had indexes and statements and many other clerical extras to keep up regularly. She had to be ready to run errands for him to all parts of the large building—for the great man was very apt to forget the existence of the office boy, in the handy nearness of his overworked private secretary. She must answer promptly the seemingly always ringing telephone bell, and must meet numerous callers, who might waste the more valuable time of the assistant editor. And so the days went on, filled to overflowing with pressing duties, until she wondered wearily sometimes how long her brain and nerves and body would stand the strain.

"But I must not think it is too hard—I must not get discouraged," she told herself almost fiercely at such times, and the thought of the little mother and child sister who looked to her small salary for all they had nerved her and drove her on with her task.

"Miss Nichols!" The sharp call came just as she was getting well into the heap of letters dictated a short time before. She rose from the machine and crossed the office to the desk of her employer obediently, as she had been trained to do.

"There must be some mistake here. Our reviewer writes that he has not received those books that you were to send last week. How is that?" and the frown was very dark indeed.

"I sent them early in the week—on Tuesday, I remember. A letter was sent the same day, notifying him that they were sent."

"Bring me the letter book, with a copy of the letter, please," demanded Mr. Wyse. Not that he would have contradicted her, for he was a gentleman, in a way. Alice laid the open book before him. At the first line the storm broke.

"You've sent them to the old address. His last letter said he was now at — ——— St., and you've sent them to the place where he lived before. The books will be lost and that review will not be ready for the number it was to be in. Such a mistake is unpardonable," and he wheeled to his desk as if it were useless to waste further time upon the girl who stood before him. Her face was white, but she compelled her voice to steadiness and calmness.

"I have seen no letter giving a new address. It must have come the day I was away ill," she said quietly.

He dived fiercely into the pigeon-holes on his desk without saying a word, and brought it forth.

"Came the eighth," he said, scanning the postmark.

"I was not here, and knew nothing of it," she answered, meeting his frown undaunted.

"You ought to have been here—it is a pity I can't get a girl who will be in her place regularly, and keep track of things better than this. It has made a mess of the whole review business for that number—and the books will probably never be found," with gloomy pessimistic vigor.

"Mr. Wyse, I have only been absent that one day in the whole year I have been here. I—" began Alice, and then the steadiness of voice suddenly left her, and rather than let him see how hurt she was, she turned quickly, without waiting for permission, and went back to her letters and machine.

"Temper, eh? Pity I can't correct a mistake without a girl flaring up like that," thought the man who had given free rein to his own ill-humor all the mornings. There were a great many things that would have seemed a pity to an observer—but they were not the things he saw.

Out in the street the sun shone and the breezes blew, and there was a stir of life and of joy in living that did not penetrate the walls of the big publishing house of the Weekly Reflector. Away down at the other end of the town a parade was forming line. The morning papers were full of the event of the day—this street parade of a great organization that was then in convention in the city. While Alice bent over her work with a sore heart, and eyes burning with unshed tears, thousands of men fell into line, and at the word of command the march began.

On and on the long line came; slowly, steadily, with the tramp of many feet and the inspiring strains of many bands the men marched. Under the waving plumes were faces young and old, boyish and manly, light-hearted with youth, and grave with years and cares and deep responsibilities. But all the faces were earnest, and all the eyes were straightforward, and deep with purpose.

As they swung into the street on which stood the big publishing house—a wide thoroughfare—they massed until they were marching many abreast, filling the street from curb to curb. The bands, too, closed up, and at a signal bands and men broke into one grand burst of music. And this is what the bands played and the men sang:

"And when the strife is fierce, the warfare long,
Steals on the ear the distant triumph song,
And hearts are brave again, and arms are strong,
Alleluia."

Up to the office, where a girl sat working with despair in her heart, surged the mighty chorus. How many others heard and were helped and uplifted and encouraged to take up the burden of life again hopefully only God knows. But that one girl listened with her seldom idle fingers motionless on the keys of her machine. Then she lifted her eyes for one brief moment.

"O, Lord, I thank thee. I felt as if I couldn't go on, but now I can. Help me to try," and then the busy machine went on with the letters.

The swell of that wonderful chorus carried her through the rest of the day successfully. It was still in her heart when she stopped beside the desk of the assistant editor on her way out. He had called her.

"Miss Nicholls, I—er—well, there have been several things lately that have not quite suited me. It seems to me that you are hardly capable of keeping up with all the duties of your position," he began, a trifle nervously.

What did he mean? she asked herself. Was he going to get the extra girl whom she had told him weeks ago was needed for the work that all fell into her hands? Or—her heart contracted with a pang of fear at the second thought!

"In fact, I have been thinking that, perhaps, another girl in your place—one a trifle more efficient and rapid in her work——" he hesitated again.

"Do you mean that you wish me to resign, Mr. Wyse?" asked Alice, with the calmness of despair.

"Well, we might put it that way, if you prefer. In the course of a week—in fact, I know of an excellent girl who could come in next week, if you——" he suggested.

"Very well, sir. Good-night," and Alice never knew how she reached the lower floor. The blow had fallen. He had discharged her for a mistake for which she was not to blame and for her inability to do well the work that would have kept two girls busy.

It was pay day. When she stepped up to the cashier's desk he glanced at her haggard face and said sympathetically:

"Aren't you feeling well, Miss Nichols? You are looking pale. Worked too hard today, eh?"

He was a friendly little old man. Alice had learned long ago to trust and like him. In a few halting words he had the story.

He listened in silence, his keen old eyes and shrewd little face growing curiously stern at the thought of the man who had dealt the blow, and again softened and moved at the sight of the girl's attempted bravery and ill-concealed distress. Before she finished the story, however, a sudden look of pleasure flashed into his face, and almost before she ended he began eagerly:

"Well, now, Miss Nichols, if that isn't just too curious for anything! Do you believe in special providences? I do, now. I shouldn't wonder if the Lord just fixed this up on purpose for you. I was asked only this morning if I knew of a good, experienced girl who wanted a position in an office where she would have a chance to advance as fast as she was capable," and the good old man went on with the details of the chance he had for her—a chance to work with Christian business men, in the office of a religious publication—a chance beside which this lost position looked very small and poor.

Alice listened with the color coming back swiftly to her cheeks in a flush of excitement.

"Oh, Mr. McCarty—if I can only get it—if I'll only suit, and it isn't too late!" she breathed eagerly. "Oh, I do hope—I—I'm just going to believe that the Lord will save it for me!" she finished tremulously.

And she did not believe in vain. She made an appointment by telephone, saw the prospective employer in his own home, and secured the coveted position before she laid her happy head upon her pillow that night.

When she carried the glad news to Mr. McCarty the next morning, he said, with a little twinkle in his shrewd old eyes, but still a very reverent note in his brisk voice: "I thought the Lord had that position saved for you." Then he added, with what seemed a change of subject at the first words: "And did you hear the bands play and the men sing yesterday? Do you know, it all reminded me of another good old hymn, and somehow it seems to fit your case, too. Did you ever sing:

"Onward, Christian soldiers, marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus going on before.
Christ, the royal Master, leads against the foe,
Forward into battle, see His banners go."

"I don't remember," smiled Alice, her eyes bright with renewed hope and happiness, in spite of the tears that shone in them. "But I can sing it with all my heart now, if you'll tell me the tune. I think I will copy it and pin it up where I can see it every day of my life," and with a parting nod she went on upstairs to the dingy office and the grim man and the overflowing work; but her heart was brave again, because the Lord had put into it the triumph song of his love and care for her—even though the strife had seemed fierce for a time and the warfare long and hard.—American Messenger.

The Season and the Celebration.

There is something in the very season of the year that gives a charm to the festivity of Christmas. In the depth of winter, when nature lies despoiled of her charms, wrapped in her shroud of sheeted snow, we turn for our gratifications to moral sources. Heart calleth to heart, and we draw our pleasures from the deep wells of living kindness which lie in the quiet recesses of our bosoms.—Washington Irving.

The Christ-Child.

As the mighty cedars rise
Slow and silent toward the skies,
Thus the influence of this Child,
Through the ages, sweet and mild,
Lifted still our fallen race
Toward the vision of God's face.

The Christmas Year.

From a little southern village comes to us the story of a woman who once lost Christmas out of her year. Just before the day, misery and disgrace, and, at last, crime came into her family. She carried the load for a while, and then fell under it, sick unto death. The blessed day dawned and passed, but she was lying unconscious, and knew nothing of it. When she came to herself the people of the town had forgotten that there ever had been a Christmas. But the day had always counted for much to Jane. It seemed to her like a word of cheer from God himself on her weary climb upward, giving her hope and strength and encouragement for the whole year to come.

Jane kept the village post office. She was apt to be sharp and cross, because she was old, and had a secret ailment which at times tortured her; but when she took up her work on the very first day that she was able to do so, it suddenly occurred to her:

"Why not pretend that this is Christmas day, and keep it, though nobody but God and I will know?"

She opened the window, and as she gave out the letters had a cordial word for every one of the neighbors outside—children and hard-worked women and feeble old men. They went away laughing and surprised, but strangely heartened. When the office was closed, she bethought herself of gifts, and baked some of her famous crullers and carried them to folk so poor that they never had any crullers, and to the old paupers in the almshouse.

She astonished each of them, too, with the gift of a dollar.

"I can do with my old cloak another year," she thought, "and they will feel rich for days!" "In his name," she said to herself, as she gave each of her poor presents.

The little gifts held out for a long time as she carried them from house to house, her face growing kinder as she went and her voice softer. It seemed to her that never before had there been so many sick, unhappy folk in the town. Surely it was right to make them glad that He had come among us—even if it were not Christmas day.

She was very tired when she had finished her day's work. She thanked Him when she knelt down at night that he had put it in her mind to keep his day in this secret fashion.

But she could not sleep for thinking of other poor neighbors to whom she might have given some little comfort or pleasure.

"Why not make them happier that He has come to-morrow, as well as to-day?" she thought, with a shock of delight in her discovery.

So it came to pass that this little postmistress made a Christmas out of every day in that year for her poor neighbors. When she had no more gifts for them she threw herself into their lives; she nursed them when they were sick, dragged them up when they fell, cried with them when they suffered, and laughed with them when they were happy.

And thus it was that she taught them of her Master, and led them to be glad every day of the year that he had been born into the world to be its helper.—Rebecca Harding Davis, in December St. Nicholas.

The first prayer of the soul in darkness is, "Lord, give me light!" The answer only fully comes when the Spirit teaches that soul the true Christmas prayer, "Lord, make me a light giver!"—Nathaniel Grover.

Christmas Before and After.

Tommy wants a pair of skates;
Tommy wants 'em now;
Mamma wants a Turkish rug;
Papa wants a cow.
Dolly wants a watch and chain;
Johnny dreams of drums.
Wait and see what each'll get
When merry Christmas comes.

Tommy'll get a handkerchief,
Possibly a book;
Mamma'll get a calendar
To tell her what to cook,
Papa'll get a box of fudge,
Dolly'll get a pin,
And Johnny'll get a painted box
To keep his collars in.

So it happens every year—
Always has, as yet—
Such a lot of things we want,
And so few we get.
Always happens, always will;
Don't know who's to blame.
Wish you all a very merry
Christmas, just the same.

THE INFANT CLASS' CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

BY EMMA C. DOWD.

On the Sunday before Christmas Betty came home all excitement.

"Mama," she exclaimed, her eyes shining with delight, "Miss Rose is going to make us all a Christmas present, and what do you s'pose it is?"

Mama guessed ever so many things, but not one was right, and Betty couldn't wait.

"It's a sleigh ride!" she squealed. "Miss Rose' father has got some great big wagons that he moves folks' furniture in, you know, and he's going to put hay in the wagons, and fur robes, and everything, so we'll keep warm, and he's going to take us all for a sleigh ride! The boys are going to be in one wagon, and the girls in the other. Won't that be a splendid Christmas present?"

Of course, mama said it would be a very nice present, and just like Miss Rose to think of it. She was always thinking of pleasures for her little pupils.

The sleigh ride came on the Wednesday between Christmas and New Year's, and the weather and the roads were just right. The snow was thick and hard and smooth, and the sun was bright and the air was still. There was never a better day for sleighing, and the little kindergartners started on their ride full of glee.

Six miles to Berlin and six miles back—that was the route, through city streets and over country highways, beside icy brooks and along woody roads, up hill and down. And the children chattered and laughed and shouted and sang, and had, as little Dorris May said, "the goodest time ever."

On the return trip, passing through the city, they came to one little scholar's home, and another's, and another's, and still they did not stop; but at Miss Rose' door Mr. Rose pulled in his horses, and the children jumped out. Into the house they trooped, and filled the rooms with talk and laughter. There they were given a lunch of sandwiches, cakes and hot chocolate, which they found they were quite ready for after their twelve-mile ride. Then Miss Rose went to the piano, and they all sang a pretty Christmas song for Mrs. Rose and Grandma Rose, and after that came the ride around the city, leaving one by one of the children, until only Miss Rose and Betty remained in the girls' sleigh.

"It is the nicest ride I ever had," said the little girl, as she kissed her teacher goodbye.

He who would be happy must become so by making others happy. He who would have a merry Christmas must help bring gladness to other hearts.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

The Advance Society, which is somewhat different from anything else, differs from the popular magazines in not printing its Christmas page a month before Christmas. The magazines that bristle with Christmas stories while you are still playing Thanksgiving football, and the magazines that teem with Thanksgiving pictures about the time you are getting well settled in school in October, never seemed to me the proper thing. So we have nothing to say just now about Washington's birthday, or our own, either, but call your attention to the fact that Christmas is here now, right this minute! Furthermore, it comes only once a year. So take hold of it and use it while you can.

At this time of good cheer, good living, and, incidentally, some religious feeling, I am glad to note that all sympathy in the world is not dead. In Spokane, Wash., lives one who has a heart, and that heart bleeds (judging by the red drops scattered over the postal card she sends) for unfortunate cats. I refer to Edith Slightam, who sends the leather card (which, as everybody knows, does not sell two for a nickel), and also to Felix, whose ear has come upon this page recently. The legend on the card says: "Oh, such a headache!" It represents a cat (with bloody head and particularly gory as to the ears) standing upon a brick wall, made, I am surprised to see, of very green bricks, the knd they dig up in Washington, no doubt. The body of this cat is arched to such a degree that it is a mere ribbon of hair, forming a semicircle like the Washington arch that you and I used to admire when we gazed up the vistas of Fifth avenue, New York.

Felix' ear is about well, but he is a sick cat all the same. When a person hasn't one thing he can always have something else. If you get rid of a sore ear, there's no reason why you can't have rheumatism or something to complain of. Just being well is nothing to talk about. Felix is sick. I think he has la grippe, with much stress on the "la!" He sneezes constantly, and when he purrs it is hoarsely done, as if his purr was stopped up and could hardly get out. He hasn't gone to bed, but perhaps it would be better for him if he did; for he will sit in draughts, and stay out doors at night, although the upstairs window is always left open for him to come in to his softly-cushioned chair. Perhaps when one has la grippe one lacks the energy to climb a tree, drop over on the roof and steal up the slope to the window ledge in order to go to bed. I don't believe when I had it (when I had it people simply called it "the grip") that I could have clawed up maiden-blush trees, and scurried over a shingled roof in the December night air to a bed, no matter how soft it might be. I lacked energy and ambition, and maybe he does, too. There is one thing strongly in favor of Felix. He has evidently heard the advice, feed a cold and starve a fever, and he is determined to feed that cold all he can get. Between his sneezes and his hoarse purrs he is whining for milk and meat (no oatmeal for him). This has been going on now for about five days, and as we don't kill our own meat we are anxiously waiting the time when the cold will be fed all it wants and go away.

Talking about Christmas, here is a message with warm holiday vibrations, though it comes from a place with the cold name of Northville, S. D.: "I want to send Orphan Charlie a Christmas present, and could not know what he would like, so I enclose $1. Please forward it to him so he can have it in time. I also send $1 for the Av. S., to be divided between Charlie and Drusie. God bless Drusie, Charlie and all friends of the Av. S." It is signed "Mrs. M. F." That's what I call Christmas. Charlie was sent the dollar in ample time, and I am heartily glad that among most of us who give our presents to those who give us presents—people, probably with more money than we have—M. F. sends her presents to one who has no mother or father to greet him gaily these bright days. Did you grown people give your presents to your own children who have enough, anyway, since they have you? Or did you make of your Christmas gifts little visits to widows and orphans in their affliction? How happy you have made your own boys and girls! But how happy have you made those boys and girls whom nobody calls son or daughter?

Jessie Callison, Toulon, Ill.: "I have been quite interested in the Av. S. letters. Please find enclosed $2 for Drusie and $1 for Orphan Charlie. Also send the enclosed letter to Drusie, as I do not know her full address. Please do not mention my name in your report." (Nobody shall wrest that name from me; they needn't try.)

Another letter from Toulon, Ill.: "I have read the Av. S. letters for a long time. As it doesn't rain much now, I will send some snowflakes for Drusie and Charlie. My husband sends 50 flakes, my sister 25 and there are 25 for myself. Please do not mention names in report.'' (You-all needn't ask me. Not one of these names am I going to divulge. I sent the letter to Drusie as requested by Miss—O my! Well, if I didn't almost let it out! I must be more careful. I say I sent the letter, and with it $15 from the Av. S., of which $2.50 was from Mi—from the persons mentioned above. I also sent a roll of picture cards from the Av. S.)

Orphan Charlie writes: ''Your letter enclosing $10.90 has been received. This I am using for car fare. I send account of the $25 I received from the Av. S. October 21. We have not moved to the new orphans' home because the boiler and heating apparatus are not working right. The contractors are now working on it.'' (By the way, be sure to pronounce that appara-tus, and for the life of you don't, don't oh, don't call it apparat-us.) ''I am now learning the 'touch' typewriting. If one can master this, it is easy to operate without looking at the board. How does Felix like the ice-box now? I presume he would rather lie under your stove, does he not? With best wishes for a merry Christmas and a New Year.''

The $25 contributed by the Av. S. was spent by our orphan thus: Suit, $10; crutches, $1.50; underwear, $1; hat, $2; shoes, $3; car fare, already borrowed from Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Brown, $3.05; car fare, 10 cents per day for 33 days, $3.30; crutch tips, pen points and paper, 70 cents; hair cut, 25 cents; balance on hand, Dec. 1, 20 cents. And as for Felix, I imagine he will leave ice boxes alone hereafter.

Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn.: ''Missed my eleventh week of the last quarter, so have to begin again. In giving record for this quarter, should work done in last part of last quarter be counted in?'' (As soon as the miss occurs the new quarter may be started. Of course, all up to the miss is lost out of count.) ''I think my little girl, 8 years old, will take up the Av. S. if we can find some history that will interest her.'' (Juvenile History of the United States is interesting and in large type. Are you acquainted with Hawthorne's ''Tanglewood Tales''? They give delightful renderings of mythology, which you may consider history, since no one is properly educated who is not familiar with the mythological references we are always stumbling over—if we haven't learned to step with them. I am sure any bright child would be as interested in ''Tanglewood Tales'' as in the most impossible fairy story. Moreover, once read, they abide in the memory, to be useful in later years. At least it was so with me.)

Here is another sweet breath of the really truly Christmas—the sort of Christmas that makes us remember what the day really stands for, and makes us glad to reflect that the spirit of him whom it commemorates still clings to its bright hours. L. C. Mize, Bunker Hill, Ill.: ''Enclosed find a small collection from the Round Prairie church ($4) for Drusie for a Christmas present. Wishing her success.''

I neglected to say that Birdie Lee Cleeton, of Keytesville, Mo., sent a dime for Drusie with her third quarterly report, and that I received a postcard showing the crescent-shaped city of Elk City, Okla. The railroad seems bounded by banks of snowdrifts, but the snow is cotton.

Havensville, Kan.: ''We had quite a snowstorm here this fall. Please count the enclosed thirteen flakes in Drusie's shower. I wish she might have a regular snowstorm by Christmas. A friend.''

Hickman Mills, Mo.: ''Enclosed find 20 drops for Drusie's shower. Hope it may not be too late. From 'Two Old Sisters,' ''

The Yule-Log.

When the Yule log burns upon the hearth,
With carol, chime, and Christmas cheer,
A fire should kindle in each soul
To gladden all the coming year;
A flame to brighten heart and home,
And shine as well for other eyes,
Fed by good deeds, which still glow on
When dim and cold the Yule-log lies.

No life so poor but it may know
A spark of this divinest fire;
No life so beautiful and rich
But still, flame-like, it may aspire.
Then kindle Yule-logs far and wide
To burn on every happy hearth,
Fit symbols of the faith and love
That purify and bless the earth!

—Louisa M. Alcott.

(Are you old enough to remember me when I lived at Independence, not far from Hickman Mills?)

Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo.: ''After a fourth attempt I have succeeded once more in keeping an Av. S. quarter. This is my nineteenth quarterly report. I enclose 10 cents for Missionary Drusie, and the same for Orphan Charlie. Greetings to them and to all the Av. S.''

I hoped this week to give you Drusie's interesting descriptions of some of ''her girls,'' but have only space for this note: ''Well, when we reached home we had a warm welcome from our dear helpers and people. We found that the women had come faithfully to learn all summer. We are in our routine work now, and I have my girls daily. I am much pleased with the pictures sent me these past months: Two rolls of 'a yard of flowers' and 'a yard of cats,' two packages of flower catalogue pictures, several others of miscellaneous ones. I have made a scrapbook for the children, and the rest I gave my girls, not indiscriminately, but as a reward for study and attendance, so they will not lose their attractiveness by being too easily won. We appreciate all attractive, clean pictures that you send. Now, I want to tell you about some of my girls, one in particular, my number one girl, little Fu Yu Lien (that sounds just like one of our Roosevelt's acquaintances) about whom I wrote you, does not attend any more. Her father died and her mother has taken her to some relatives in the country. Poor girl! I feel so sorry for her! She was so eager to learn all she could about Jesus! Her name means Water Lily. But little Wang Chin Ai (dearly beloved) still attends, as bright and mischievous as ever, bringing her little friends as of yore. She is slowly unbinding her feet. If they are unbound too quickly it is too painful, for the bones of the toes are almost broken, because all the toes are hid away under the bottom of the foot. Chin Ai's mother has made her some pretty flowered shoes, and Chin Ai is as proud of her 'opened' feet as can be.''

Who can read the last sentence without realizing the blessing such people as Drusie are to heathen lands? And who, realizing that blessing, can fail to be proud of the Advance Society in trying to support her in her good deeds? Who is not glad that he or she has helped to ''open'' those feet, even though the help was no more than five cents sent when there was no more to send? It ought to make us happy, these Christmas days, to reflect that our contributions, however small, have put Orphan Charlie where he needs typewriter paper and pen points, and have helped to feed and clothe Missionary Drusie so she could spread the news of the love of Christ. It seems to me that the Av. S. and its friends ought to be happier than other people, anyhow! Aren't you? I am.

A Friend, Palmyra, Ill.: ''Since only a short time after the Av. S. was organized, I have been greatly interested in all it has done. Enclosed is a small offering for Drusie's shower. Best wishes to all interested in this work, and may our Heavenly Father richly bless the Av. S., and Charlie and Drusie.'' (20 cents.)

Bentonville, Ark.

A little thinking shows us that the deeds of kindness we do are effective in proportion to the love we put into them. More depends upon the motive than upon the gift. If the thought be selfish, if we expect compensation or are guilty of close calculation, the result will be like the attitude of mind which invited.—Dresser.

A PRAYER FOR THE NEW YEAR.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

SAVE us, Lord, this fair New Year,
From the word that starts a tear;
From the streams of guile that lure
From Thy living waters pure;
From the heartless greed of gold,
With its perils manifold;
From the pride that blinds the sight
To the glory of Thy light;
From the bigot's loveless zeal,
Reckless of Thy Kingdom's weal.

Grant us in this New Year, Lord,
Diligence to seek Thy Word;
Eyes to see with vision clear,
Hearts as Thine own Truth sincere.
Grant us hope, to point the way
From the darkness unto Day.
Give us faith that life is good,
Give us joy in brotherhood.
Grant us, other boons above,
That all-crowning virtue, Love.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

To Our Subscribers,

Dear Friends:—

The date of this issue of The Christian-Evangelist closes the year of our Lord 1908, and with its close I will close my official connection with the Company publishing this paper.

After one year of very close application to the manifold duties of the office I hold, I have decided to sever my connection with the Christian Publishing Company, and devote my time, energies and abilities to another field of endeavor that I hope will yield such returns as I have been accustomed to during the previous years of my business life.

My retirement from this business is voluntary on my part; and in leaving, I bespeak for my successors and those who remain, the heartiest support from all who may have business relations with this Company.

I am duly appreciative of the kind treatment received from many of our patrons; and, in leaving the position that has brought me in close touch with them, I want to thank all who have favored me in any way.

Wishing this Company and all of its patrons a happy and prosperous New Year, I am,

Sincerely,

Current Events

The Popular Vote.

There were 14,852,239 votes cast at the last election for presidential candidates, exceeding by 1,341,531 the number cast in 1904. The candidates of the Republican, Democratic and Socialist parties increased their vote, Taft getting 7,672,676, Bryan 6,393,182 and Debs 447,651. The biggest increase was Mr. Bryan's, who polled 1 315,211 more than the Democratic candidate in 1904. Mr. Taft received 14,190 more than Mr. Roosevelt in 1904, and Mr. Debs ran 45,368 ahead of the 1904 candidate. The Populists were the heaviest losers this year, their candidate receiving only 33,871 votes, as against 117,183 in 1904. The surprise is the loss of prohibition votes, Mr. Chafin running 17,284 behind the 1904 mark. It would seem from this that voters prefer to handle the liquor question by local option methods.

Half Sugar.

How many people know how sweet they are? Such a question gives great scope for the various degrees of self-esteem to have fanciful play. As a matter of fact, the young man who is just "the sweetest thing," according to the language of some young ladies, may really be not nearly as sugary as some crusty old bachelor. The government makes no distinctions of this kind that we can lay hold of, but in our experience we know of many old bachelors fond of sugar. The government does tell us, however, that the average citizen of the United States consumes half his own weight in sugar every year. The total amount used in 1907 in our country was 7,089,667,975 pounds—figures without meaning, so great are they, until we reduce them to a statement that the per capita consumption is 82.6 pounds for each man, woman and child, and on this kind of a basis there may be some old bachelors who are more than half sugar and some young girls who will not meet the average. But here is deep water. Of more interest is the fact that the world's production of sugar has practically doubled within the past twenty years, and that beets now supply one-half of the grand total, while in the United States there was, according to these latest statistics, an excess of 23,000,000 pounds in favor of the beet.

Mexican Advance.

When Mexico seriously discusses the abolition of bull-fighting, we may reasonably infer that the country is making a decided advance. A bill abolishing the bull-fight has actually passed the lower house of the Mexican Congress, and it is said the upper house will not reject it, so that in a few months this cruel sport will be proscribed. Gambling is now against the law, while Sunday closing of saloons is also a new advance step. These are moral improvements that go with the material progress that is characterizing the regime of President Diaz. An improved banking law has just been adopted, the government is encouraging irrigation by subsidizing each acre so treated to the extent of $5 gold, and $30,000,000 American is now being spent for a new water supply system for the City of Mexico, and an extension of the street car and electric lighting system will cost nearly as much. Despite the recent revolutionary outbreak, Mexicans seem to be well satisfied that peace means happiness for them. They are not worrying about the to-morrow.

Federated Labor and the Courts.

The decision of Justice Wright of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, against the three labor officials—Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison—for refusing to observe a court order restraining them from placing on the "Unfair" and "We don't patronize" lists, the Buck Stove and Range Company of St. Louis, has created wide discussion in union labor circles, and some strong resolutions which have been passed by union labor men. The decision commits the officials mentioned to imprisonment for contempt of court. Each of the men pleaded guiltless of having knowingly violated any law of the country by his actions. It is not denied, however, that they did continue to publish these firms on their boycotted lists after the restraining order of the court had been issued. The case will probably be appealed to the Supreme Court for a final decision. President Roosevelt, who has been urged to intervene in behalf of the men, has declared his inability to deal with the case while it is pending in court. The decision may be regarded as harsh, and, perhaps, excessive, but the American people, while favoring all proper effort of laboring men to protect themselves against oppression, are not hospitable to the idea of the boycott as a means of enforcing what labor unions may regard as their rights. The principle at issue is an important one, and the country will await with interest its ultimate decision by the Supreme Court.

Helping the Country Schools.

The Kansas Educational Commission intends to secure legislation in aid of the small country schools of the state, and a law is to be asked authorizing appropriations to supplement the resources of the sparsely populated districts. It is a patriotic intention which will seek to give to the country children seven months of school instead of the four months with which many of them have to be satisfied. This would be an "open door" policy which all enlightened people would approve. There need be no retrenchment of funds for higher educational institutions. The "little red schoolhouse" must be maintained adequately. But our universities, too, are all short of needed funds. More money for education of the best kind!

Water and Waterways.

The one supreme question with thousands of people in this country is water. In some form or other it affects all of us. Hence the congress on the subject of national rivers and harbors is a matter of interest. It assembled in New Orleans, and delegates from all over the country attended. Two points emphasized were: First, the necessity for the speedy completion of the waterways already approved by the engineering corps and authorized by the United States Congress; second, in order to do this work speedily, and the waterways be opened at the earliest possible moment to the commerce of the country, that Congress authorize the issuance and sale of $500,000,000 of United States bonds, to be sold as required to supplement the regular appropriations. The value of this movement to conserve and utilize the water supply is incalculable. A prevention of flood, new highways of commerce, the blossoming of the desert—these are some of the boons that are contemplated from man's mastery of our river courses. The outlay suggested is insignificant.

Editorial

Forty Years an Editor.

With this number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which closes its forty-fifth volume, I complete forty years of editorial life. I began editorial work within a few months after graduation from college and after my ordination to the ministry. This has made my ministry twofold—by pen and by voice, through press and pulpit. Neither my entrance upon editorial work nor my continuance in it through two score years was a matter of my own choosing. I had other plans for life which seemed very attractive to me, but the way opened unexpectedly for this form of ministry, and I yielded to the urgent persuasion and advice of a godly man and former teacher, and became joint editor and proprietor with him, January 1, 1869. Could I have foreseen all the sacrifices, heartaches, tears, toils and misrepresentations involved, my heart would probably have failed me.

NO AVAILABLE EXIT.

It was easier to get in than it has been to get out. Often have I felt a strong desire to lay this burden down, but the way of honorable exit from the editorial calling has always been closed. Recently on recovering from a protracted and painful illness it occurred to me that the close of my fortieth year of editorship would be an appropriate time for my retirement from the position of responsibility and of unceasing toil which I had so long held. A door of escape seemed to be open to me, but when this fact came to the knowledge of some of my ministerial and business friends they strongly urged me to remain at the helm a while longer; and so, as neither the disabilities of age nor of infirm health seemed to forbid it, I have again yielded to the advice of my brethren. I have come to accept it as God's will that I remain in this form of public service until He shall discharge me, either by death or disability, or by such a combination of circumstances as will make it clear to me that it is His will that I should retire.

Not that I have any desire or purpose to retire from active service. I have neither reached the age-limit of retirement, nor have I accumulated a sufficient fortune in these forty years as editor and publisher—as some seem to think—to furnish a support for myself and those dependent upon me without work of some kind. I have, however, had in view some literary work of a different kind which I desire to do before I go hence. When I expressed this desire once to Prof. Briggs he said: "Stick to your tripod, my brother. The weekly religious journal is the greatest throne of power to-day in the Church." That may be; but when the time comes, as come it must, when another can wield that power through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST more wisely and vigorously than the present incumbent, I hope to have grace enough to retire, not only willingly, but gladly.

PROGRESS IN THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.

In looking back over these forty years of journalism, I am deeply impressed with the progress which has been made in the religious world within that period. I do not refer to progress in numbers and wealth, but in the spirit of Christian courtesy and brotherhood; in a worthier conception of the gospel and of the real work of the kingdom of God. Misrepresentation of each other on the part of religious bodies is now comparatively rare, and is confined to the ill-bred and uneducated. Religious debates have fallen into "innocuous desuetude," and proselyting, or "sheep-stealing" is no longer in good repute. No religious body has made greater improvement in the amenities and courtesies of Christian life in our relationship with others than our own people. Opposed and misrepresented as we were in our earlier history, and compelled to defend ourselves against the narrowest and bitterest kind of persecution, we caught the evil contagion, in press and pulpit and throughout the rank and file of our membership, and gave tit for tat. We have all learned a more excellent way, and we believe that our readers will testify that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been a leader toward a higher type of religious journalism and of greater fraternity among those owning a common Lord and Savior. This has led a certain class of brethren to charge the paper with a lack of "backbone." A charge of this kind was once made against Isaac Errett, who aptly replied that "some brethren mistook *jaw*bone for *back*bone!"

Not less remarkable has been the growth among our people of the spirit of missions. The art of co-operation had to be learned, and what was even more difficult, a deeper concern had to be felt for the salvation of the heathen world, and the Christianization of the ungospeled masses in our own land. Nothing has done so much to unify the brethren and to deepen their religious life as the unselfish work of missions in our own and other lands. In seeking to save others we have saved ourselves.

Another mark of encouraging progress is the deeper interest being manifested in behalf of our colleges and in the cause of Christian education. We have been far too backward in the endowment of our colleges, and in providing an educated ministry and educated laymen for the responsibilities of leadership in the various departments of our work. It is gratifying that we are awakening to a deeper sense of our obligations to our institutions of learning, and of our dependence upon them. Out of this lack of a sufficient number of properly educated and trained ministers and other leaders have grown most of the faults which have hindered and hampered our work. An extreme conservatism which identifies the new with the false and refuses to keep step with the march of progress; a one-sided and disproportionate emphasis of certain doctrines; the erection of personal opinions into tests of fellowship; inability to love and co-operate with those who differ from us, and the tendency to quarrel over trifles instead of uniting on the great fundamentals—these are all unfailing marks of imperfect intellectual and spiritual development. Neither education alone, nor piety by itself, can make a great people; but the two combined are essential to that unity, co-operation and liberty which must characterize every great religious movement.

MUCH REMAINS TO BE DONE.

We have accomplished much in the one hundred years of our existence as a religious reformation, in spite of hindering causes. We have had great truths to declare, which have been mighty sources of power and of success. We have happily outgrown many of the errors and limitations of our childhood and youth, but there are many other lessons to learn, and many other great truths for us to practice more faithfully than we have yet done, before our mission is accomplished. While preaching unity we have not sufficiently practiced it. We could to-day multiply our power tenfold by simply practicing co-operation among ourselves and working together for the accomplishment of our common tasks. We have learned to do this, to some extent, in our missionary and benevolent work, but in other most important features of our propaganda, we have not learned to pull together. But no doubt this lesson, with others, will be learned after awhile.

THINGS WE HAVE STOOD FOR.

It has been my steadfast aim throughout my journalistic career to stand for unity, for liberty, or freedom of thought, for a deeper spirituality, for education, for co-operation among ourselves in missions and in every good work, and, as far as possible, for co-operation with others for the advancement of Christ's kingdom on earth. No one can be more conscious than myself of the imperfections of my work in these two score years of editorial service. And yet, as I look back in retrospect, I am conscious of having aimed, at all times, to pursue that policy that would make for the permanent welfare and best interests of our Cause. As to the past, what is written is written. As to the future, I can do no better, and can promise nothing better, than to seek daily guidance from God for daily tasks, and to speak the truth, in love, as God gives me to see the truth. Whether the remaining term of my service is long or short—and it can not be very long—I pray God that it may be such as he can approve and bless.

I can not close these reflections without expressing my gratitude to the readers who have stood by me through good and evil report, some of them through all my years of editorial service, and some of them for a less period, who have borne with my imperfections and have given me their love, confidence and hearty appreciation. That I may be worthy of such confidence and esteem is, next to my desire to please God, my highest ambition and aspiration. As we are now facing together the duties and responsibilities of the New Year, let us pray that our labors together in the kingdom of God may be marked by signal tokens of his divine favor and blessing, to whom be glory and dominion forever more!

J. H. Garrison.

A Glance Forward Into the New Year.

Before we take leave of the old year of 1908, it might be well to take a forward look and forecast some of the things which THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST hopes to provide for its readers during the coming year. The year 1909 is destined to be historic in the annals of the Disciples of Christ. It marks the completion of a hundred years of history of a religious movement whose aim it was, and is, to promote the unity of Christ's followers by a return to the Christianity of Christ. The event is to be celebrated by a great convention in the city of Pittsburg in the coming autumn, which is likely to excel in numbers and in enthusiasm any previous religious gathering in the history of the country. We have set for ourselves certain great tasks relating to our educational, missionary, benevolent and publishing interests, the completion of which will show the world what manner of people we are.

It may be assumed that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which stands related in a peculiar way to this Centennial celebration, will make that event an important feature of the paper in the coming volume. This will include (1) a clear setting forth of the principles and aims of our movement by a number of our ablest and most representative men, giving a more comprehensive view of the great objects we are seeking to accomplish than the world has yet come to understand. (2) Historical sketches of the pioneers of the movement, not only those who have become known to fame, but a number of forgotten heroes who may be sleeping to-day in unmarked graves. (3) A sketch of some of the historic churches which have contributed in an important way to the Reformation, or which have been associated with some of its historic events. (4) The presentation, by men best qualified for the work, of our Centennial aims with the view of enlisting all our forces, as far as possible, in the realization of these aims. (5) The Editor hopes to be able to run a serial through a part of the year entitled, "The Story of a Century," in which he will set forth, succinctly, the rise and progress of the religious Reformation of the nineteenth century up to the present time.

Yielding to the solicitation of others, the Editor in his Easy Chair will, if opportunity affords, furnish some autobiographical sketches during the coming volume.

A marked feature of the paper for the coming year will be an attempt to throw light on Practical Problems such as "How to Build Up the Sunday-school; or, the Sunday-school Class;" "How to Make a Live and Interesting Prayer-meeting;" "How Two or More Weak Churches May Co-operate in Securing Pastoral Care and Oversight;" "How Ministers Prepare Their Sermons, and Do Their Pastoral Work;" "How Churches Should Select Their Officers," and "The Best Method of Securing a Pastor;" "How to Organize a Church for Work." In a word, we wish to point out, How to do things, by men who have actually done them.

With a view of increasing the number of young men entering the ministry we shall hope to conduct a symposium on "Motives Which Led Me Into the Ministry," by a number of our younger ministers, especially.

We should like to stimulate interest in our colleges by having a number of graduates tell, "What the College Did for Me."

With a view of helping our readers live the religious life, we shall solicit from a number of our older men and women some suggestions and incidents, "From the Experiences of My Life."

We are planning to give more attention to Current Literature than heretofore.

As to news our motto will be "The Best, in the Best Shape; What all the People Want, and What is Worth While"—omitting the unimportant and all padding.

The Home Department will receive special attention. We shall begin a serial with the next number by J. Breckenridge Ellis, entitled "Nathaniel B."—a story of the first half of the eighteenth century, time of George Washington's father's life. The story is located at first in the wilderness west of the Blue Ridge, then in the colony of Virginia, the object being to present a faithful picture of those times, manner of life, adventures and especially to portray the Indians in their native homes, the French in their outposts, the colonials on the plantations. Of course, there will be a love story at the last, told in autobiographical style, which will not be lacking in humor.

In addition to that there will be a number of short serial stories. We shall invite symposiums on "The Training of Children;" "What We have Learned from Our Children;" "Household Management," and other topics that will interest the women and children. Perhaps we may offer some prizes for contributions to this department.

It may be seen from the foregoing that our purpose is to enlist as many readers as possible, and to draw out from the practical experience of our readers the best they have for the benefit of others. We shall need the co-operation of our readers to carry out this program successfully, and especially in widening the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which, in this Centennial year, ought to go into all the homes of the brotherhood. If this outline for the year 1909 should come to the eyes of any who have been, but are not now, readers of the paper, or to those who have never honored us with their subscriptions, we cordially invite them to join our circle.

We especially invite those who have been readers in the past to continue with us the coming year, and all of those who may have been dropped under our postal regulations to renew their subscriptions, and let us make the year 1909 the greatest year in the history of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. To this end we pledge our best energies and efforts, and upon our mutual labors we invoke the blessing of Almighty God.

A Memorable Year.

A new year is an interesting fact in the life of every individual and in any religious body; but the year upon which we are about to enter has greater significance to the Disciples of Christ than to any other religious body. It is our Centenary year. We shall be a hundred year-old Reformation in the coming autumn when we hold our Centennial convention at Pittsburg. To us, therefore, 1909 will be the annus mirabilis, or the wonderful year. We trust at least it may be made such by reason of what we shall accomplish before it closes.

It deserves to be impressed on the minds of all that something extraordinary is to be expected of us this Centennial year. Churches, individuals, missionary organizations and colleges should lay out for themselves extraordinary tasks to harmonize with the extraordinary occasion. Ordinary gifts and sacrifices will not suffice for a memorable year like this. Something should be done that would be an adequate expression of our appreciation of this Cause to which we are giving our lives. This thought needs to be emphasized in all our pulpits.

Our men of wealth have special responsibility resting upon them during this historic year. They should plan and carry out some deed of generosity far in excess of their ordinary gifts in behalf of some of our public enterprises. It is evident that if our men of large means do not lead the way in generous gifts toward our various worthy causes, we shall have no adequate celebration of a hundred years of splendid history. Their gifts will stimulate others of lesser means, and in the aggregate we shall do something worthy of our Cause and worthy of the occasion.

We are not doing this thing in a corner. The eyes of the religious world are upon us. A hundred years of history are looking down upon us. The spirits of the mighty dead, whose labors we have inherited, must be deeply interested spectators of what we are seeking to do. Yea, the eyes of our Lord Himself, whose prayer for the unity of His disciples we are seeking to fulfill, are doubtless upon us! Seeing, then, that we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside our easily-besetting sins, and gird ourselves for the mighty tasks before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith. It is only as we look to Him and catch more of His Spirit, "who being rich for our sakes became poor," that we shall be willing to make those sacrifices which are necessary to accomplish the tasks we have set before us. It is only, too, as we catch His breadth of spirit and largeness of vision, that we can carry on successfully our great plea for union, and give such an illustration of that unity among ourselves as will impress the world much more than our theories and doctrines.

These are no small tasks to which the new year calls us. There is opportunity for putting forth the very best there is in us, and giving the fullest expression of our love and loyalty to Christ and to his cause. The demands that are upon us appeal to everything that is noble in our nature, and if we do not rise to meet these demands in some worthy measure, the unused opportunities that are before us will rise up and condemn us.

Notes and Comments

"Ring out the old, ring in the new!" Ring out the old error, ring in the new truth. Ring out old and evil habits and ring in new and better ones. Ring out hatred and ring in love. Ring out narrowness and intolerance, and ring in breadth of vision and the spirit of Christian tolerance. Ring out the era of division and strife, and ring in the new and brighter era of unity and co-operation. Ring out the spirit of pride, of class-hatred and of arrogance, and ring in the brotherhood of man, when

It is true the line between the old and the new year is an arbitrary one, but none the less it is a universally recognized division of time, and serves the purpose, as well as if it were a natural division, of reminding us of the rapid flight of the years, and of the necessity of applying our hearts unto wisdom. It serves, also, as a suitable time for beginning those reforms in our own lives which we have been promising ourselves to make, so that the future may be better than the past. It is better to resolve and make an honest effort at better living, even though we fail, than not to have resolved and tried. No earnest, well-meant effort to do better is ever in vain. Half-hearted resolves are seldom, if ever, carried out, but when one solemnly covenants with God that he will henceforth abstain from practices he knows to be evil, and to pursue those things which he knows to be right, he is well on the way toward permanent improvement.

A Baptist contemporary calls attention to the fact that "in actual net gains in the membership last year, Baptists stand first among the religious bodies of the States. According to the government census bureau, the number of baptisms last year was 175,598, and the net gain 103,338." There is a loss, however, in the above figures of over 72,000. It is not simply by the number of converts gained that we make progress, but by the number we hold. This is a lesson which all of us need to learn. The churches ought to be no less zealous in retaining their converts, and in building them up in Christian life, than in winning them to the confession of Christ and to baptism.

The Catholic Citizen gives the following estimate of a number of the leading religious bodies thus:

"We Catholics have our separated brethren sized up as follows: The Presbyterians are the most scholarly, the Episcopalians the most gentlemanly, the Congregationalists the most cultured, the Methodists the most religious, and the Baptists the most bigoted."

From the Protestant point of view, the Baptists would seem to have the best of it, for their "bigotry" would be measured by their steadfastness in resisting the sacramentarianism and ecclesiastical despotism of the Roman Catholic Church.

The Republic, of this city, has an article from an anti-federationist whose name is John S. Wightman, and who signs himself as "Secretary of the Central States' Religious Liberty Association," which has its office in Kansas City, Mo. This writer fears that federation is, after all, "a church trust." The pronouncements of the Federal Council at Philadelphia against the liquor traffic, and the proper observance of the Lord's day as a day of rest for the laboring man, and of opportunity for religious worship, have awakened the fears of this advocate of "personal liberty," who sees visions of the "fearful scenes and untold sufferings of the Dark Ages," and the relighting of "the splendid gardens of Nero for the chariot races," and all the "tortures of the thumbscrew, the rack and the fagot, and the exquisite punishment of the praying Torquemada!" Our friend may quiet his nerves. The Federal Council has no authority but the truth and moral force of its recommendations, and these are to be used only against things that all the religious world agree are evil. We are not surprised, however, that this secretary should see in this union of religious forces against the moral evils of the times, a cause of alarm for those whose gain comes through practices which war against the material and moral welfare of the people. He is the first consistent anti-federationist we have seen.

The following is clipped from a personal letter, but its message is too timely to escape publication, although we do not feel at liberty to use the writer's name. After a handsome compliment to the Editor, which we reluctantly omit, our brother says:

"Some people can never learn that time is one of the most potent and skillful agents in dissolving complications. They weary God by the speed and directness with which they would fain do all things. O, that we all might appreciate the depth of Isaiah's doctrine concerning the 'inviolability of Zion'! 'Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone of sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste.' O, that we might learn to rest upon this stone with greater confidence, and not hurl little stones so feverishly at the imagined assailants of Zion!"

The stability of Zion—that is the lesson many of us need to learn. "God is in the midst of her. She shall not be moved." Let's not get excited any more over small things as if the foundation were dropping out of Zion. "He that believeth shall not make haste."

The address by I. J. Spencer, which we publish this week, following that by George H. Combs, published December 17, will serve to remind our Baptist brethren that we, at least, are in earnest about union, and are anxious to remove whatever obstacles may be in the way of the realization of that object. We could wish that some of our Baptist contemporaries might feel at liberty to publish these addresses, in whole or in part, as THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has published similar addresses from some of their ablest men. We took occasion on the delivery of Brother Spencer's address at the Baptist Congress to endorse it as a fair, representative statement of our position. The fact that we now publish the address, and that we published that of Brother Combs last week is further evidence that we endorse their sentiments. An editor, of course, must be careful what he endorses lest he unwittingly give his sanction to heresy; but looked at, not microscopically, but telescopically, we dare commend them both, not to Baptists alone, but to Disciples as well, as safe, sane and timely teaching.

In a communication from Dr. Moore, he writes concerning the need of a book and tract fund as follows:

"The Disciples so far have failed to meet a great responsibility. They certainly have no reason to be ashamed of the plea they are making; but they have, perhaps, depended too much upon its inherent strength to work its way to the public conscience. Success in any great enterprise is achieved only through wise and efficient means. Now it must be evident to every thoughtful Disciple of Christ that thousands of the more intelligent people can be reached only through good books. This is the day of the library. But what are we, as a people, doing to supply these libraries with such books as will disseminate the great principles for which we contend? Furthermore, are we using the only means by which many thoughtful people can possibly be influenced by sending books to them to read? If a selection could be made from some of the best books that have been issued, and these could be sent to every minister in the United States, the result would be incalculable."

Brother Moore proposes the accumulation of a fund of at least $10,000, the interest of which should go to the distribution of good literature, and proposes to contribute himself $100 to this fund, and that he might even give $500 if the matter should be taken up promptly by others. That would be a great thing. But we need a few hundred dollars to expend just now in the distribution of some current literature. We have been thinking of it recently in connection with the need of circulating Brother McLean's little booklet on "Alexander Campbell as a Preacher," which should be put in the hands of the ministers of the various Protestant bodies of the country, who do not know Mr. Campbell. What a good thing it would be also, to furnish the addresses of Brothers Combs and Spencer to all the Baptist and Free Baptist ministers in the United States!

From the announcement of Brother Pittman elsewhere in his business letter, it will be seen that he severs his connection with the Company with the close of this year. We certainly have no disposition to censure a business man, acting on business considerations, for choosing the kind of business that offers the best remuneration for his service, as long as the business itself is honorable. Brother Pittman has proved himself to be a man of energy, of untiring industry, and of good business capacity. In many respects, this has been the best year in the history of the company, and many of the changes inaugurated this year will, we are sure, prove a lasting benefit to this Company and its patrons. Our best wishes go with him into whatever field of usefulness he may enter, and we sincerely hope that he may win the success and the reward which his abilities merit.

Editor's Easy Chair.

When we sit down in the deepening shadows of the dying year, after all the other tasks on the paper have been done, to write these closing paragraphs for the Easy Chair, there always steals over us, in spite of our efforts to resist it, a feeling of sadness. If we try to analyze it, or seek the causes of it, we can reach no more satisfactory solution than that it is the finishing of another year's work, and the realization that whatever opportunities for truer and better service were open to us during the year, without being improved, are gone forever. Some whom we might have influenced for good have been called away from this earth-life, and our opportunity to help them has departed with them. Some of the readers with whom we began the year have fallen out by the way, and are not to-night in our circle of readers. New faces, it is true, are seen in the circle, but we sigh for the old familiar faces which are absent. Perhaps it was our fault that we did not interest and hold them. It may be, however, they did not read the paper enough to become interested in its contents. But we are willing to share the blame with them, and to admit that if the paper had been better adapted to their special needs they might have remained with us. By far the greater number, however, of those who have dropped out during the year, have had their names erased under the postal regulations of the government, and without their consent or ours. Most of these, we hope, will join our ranks again, as we study together, during the coming year, the problems which have to do with our highest interests for time and for eternity. But whatever may be the cause which produces it, this feeling of solemnity is upon our spirit to-night as we sit by the embers of the dying year and think of the days and of the opportunities which are gone forevermore.

But how about the future—that vague, mysterious future that lies before us, whose seas have never been charted, and over whose untroubled surface no adventurous keel has ever voyaged? If God in his mercy shall hand out to us, one by one, the golden days of another year, what shall we do with them? We know what his purpose is in extending the period of our earthly probation. He means that we shall use them for the development of our own characters and for the salvation of others. It is not his purpose nor desire that we should use the precious days of the swiftly-circling years for the heaping up of riches, for selfish gratification, or for inglorious ease. As we look back upon time, from the heights of eternity, we shall see that no precious jewel from earth's mines can compare in value with the worth of a single day, if it be filled with noble thoughts and worthy, unselfish deeds. One of our wealthiest men has said that he would give his fortune for his youth again. What are gold and silver and bonds compared with the value of time and of the boundless possibilities of youth? Is there anything better that we can do, as we stand on the threshold of the new year, than to commit our way unto God, and ask him to lead us through all the vicissitudes and experiences, of joy and of sorrow, which lie before us, and to give us strength to bear our burdens and perform our tasks, while we walk in the daily sunlight of his favor? We have reached the point in life when we would not risk ourselves for a single day amid life's changes and trials without the guiding hand and girding strength of our heavenly Father.

But, on the other hand, there are reflections which comfort us. If the Easy Chair has carried to any of its readers a word of instruction or encouragement, or of comfort in hours of trial and disappointment; if it has made life seem more worth living to any who feel the weight of its burdens; if it has sometimes made a small rift in the clouds of disappointment and of sorrow through which the sunshine of hope has come to light a shadowed path; if it has helped its readers to see new meaning and beauty in the commonplace things of life; if it has helped to beget in the hearts of any a kindlier feeling toward one's fellowmen, a warmer love for our common humanity; if it has aided its readers in their aspirations after a deeper and a higher spiritual life, and caused them to appreciate, more than ever, the beauty of holiness; if it has heartened any discouraged toiler in the world's great workshop to bear his burdens more cheerfully, and perform his tasks more faithfully, seeing that these are God's tools by which he fashions us into his own image; if, in a word, the Easy Chair has enabled its readers to see that, in spite of the wail of pessimists, this world in which we live is a great and beautiful world, and that the people in it are not wholly bad; that human kindness and unselfishness are on the increase, and that goodness is ultimately to triumph over evil, and right over wrong, then we have not written in vain nor toiled without reward. If we take the testimony of the hundreds who have expressed their gratitude for such help as evidence of the thousands who, feeling the same way, have not written, the Easy Chair may well congratulate itself that whatever good seed it may have sown has fallen upon friendly soil, and has not proved unfruitful.

A reader whose name had been dropped from our list for a while, in renewing his subscription, says: "I want to join THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family again." We like that idea of the family as applied to our circle of readers. Surely we are brothers and sisters in a very real and special sense. We study together our religious problems, plan together for larger things, and rejoice together over the triumphs of the gospel at home and abroad, and sorrow together over what hurts and hinders the cause we plead. It is no wonder that we come to have a sort of family feeling toward each other. It is impossible for people to think together on the same great subjects for any length of time without coming into closer unity of thought and of feeling. We of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family, who have been in the family long enough to understand its spirit and sentiments, know what we stand for and why we stand for it. We feel that we occupy a unique place among our religious papers, and have an important mission to fulfill in relation to our own movement in behalf of Christian union. We think we know how to hold, with unyielding tenacity, to all the fundamentals of our common faith, keeping our minds and hearts open to every new truth or every larger and better view of old truths, which the growing knowledge of the world may reveal to us. We have learned, too, that the highest fidelity to the essential principles of our own movement requires liberty of thought among ourselves and a broader spirit of Christian fellowship in our relations with other followers of Christ. We have the conviction that a plea conceived in such spirit, and seeking to accomplish so worthy an aim, ought to produce the highest type of Christian character and the noblest illustrations of consecrated Christian service. If you believe in these things you belong to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family.

It remains now for the Easy Chair to speak the closing word for the volume of 1908—the forty-fifth volume of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Shall it be a word of complaint over criticisms, hardships, disappointments and trials? Nay, these "light afflictions which are but for a moment, are not worthy to be compared" with the blessings we have received along the way, to say nothing of "the glory which shall be revealed hereafter." Among these are tokens of friendship and brotherly love from our readers who have understood our motives and policy, and whose words of sympathy and approval have been a source of great strength to us. And then, there is the joy of working for God, and with God, in carrying out his plans, which has been a constant inspiration. The fact that he can use imperfect efforts like ours to further his truth has been one of the richest compensations of these toilful years. Time would fail us to tell of all God's unfailing goodness.

O the blessedness of knowing that it is not in our own strength and wisdom that we are to do God's work, but that we may confidently rely on him for such supplies of grace and truth as are needful for our day and task! And so we have gone on through the year, and through these twoscore years, "leaning on the Everlasting Arm." Though we have often failed him, blessed be his name, he has never failed us! And now, O Father, as Thou has helped us in the past, be Thou with us, and be our help and hope in the days to come! Give us strength to bear any burdens Thou hast laid upon us! Breathe upon all the readers of this paper, and upon all the friends of the Cause for which it stands, the spirit of peace, of unity, of brotherly love and of Christly loyalty to Thy will! In His name! Amen!

What Steps Should Be Immediately Taken

Toward the Organic Union of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ?*

By I. J. Spencer

MR. PRESIDENT:—I esteem it a great privilege to make a plea for Christian union, especially as the religious bodies represented here are coming more and more to regard such a union as practicable.

I am not responsible for the statement of my subject; but accepted it with the mental reservation that I should indicate the immediate spiritual, rather than the mechanical steps that ought to be taken. I wish to be understood, however, as advocating organic union when we are ready for it. But, as I believe in a change of heart before baptism, so I think the spirit of unity should be so cherished that it will easily find channels in which to flow. We do not want organic ecclesiasticism. Local church independency amounts to a "Thus saith the Lord" with us. I would take every step toward organic co-operation that can be taken wisely, but I believe the foreing process should be applied inwardly, rather than outwardly. The Christian plant is an endogen, and not an exogen; it grows from within outward, and not from without inward.

As Daniel Webster said of eloquence, so we may speak concerning Christian union: "It will come, if it come at all, like the outbursting of a fountain, with spontaneous, original, native force." Its springs are in heaven, waiting for conduits in human hearts through which to flow in blessing upon the world. Everything is beautiful in its season; and there is a time for every purpose under heaven.

Having married a couple, on a certain occasion, I was asked by the bride how I liked the groom. When I had answered, she said: "The reason I ask is that I never met him myself until Tuesday." You will not be surprised to hear that they separated.

The only proper way to approach this theme is in the spirit of prayer.

We can not advance except upon our knees. The failure of unions made prematurely and unwisely affords a caution. Jesus himself approached it thus. He deemed it right to pray to the Father, rather than to argue with his followers. The same love that brought him to the cross brought him to that prayer. It was a peculiar spiritual oneness for which he made petition. He prayed but for union in him and in the Father. The spiritual union, however, was to be so tangible, visible, spectacular and uncontradictable, so simple, impressive, commendable, magnetic and gracious, that the wicked world, seeing it, would be won to Christ, its divine Center.

The plea of the Apostle Paul to the Ephesian brethren, to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," immediately followed the record of his prayer to the Father that they might be strengthened by the Holy Spirit and be filled with all the fullness of God. I know the Spirit of God desires union, and to be led of the Spirit is not to be forced apart from, but drawn toward the brethren. We must not wait for union to come as an irresistible grace. We must seek it.

The next step I would suggest is to create a profound and universal conviction of the sin of division in the Church of God.

The writer of the epistles to the Corinthians idealizes his brethren as "sanctified" and "called to be saints," but yet really unspiritual and only "babes in Christ," because there were dissensions among them. Some said they were of Paul. Others were followers of Cephas, and yet others of Apollos. He asks: "Is Christ divided?" Will any one dare to exalt a doctrine, a person or a name, even the name of an apostle instead of the crucified Christ? "Were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" Baptism, brethren, is nothing except for the name of Christ. Therefore he was glad that he had baptized none of them, save only a few, lest anyone should say he had baptized in the name of Paul.

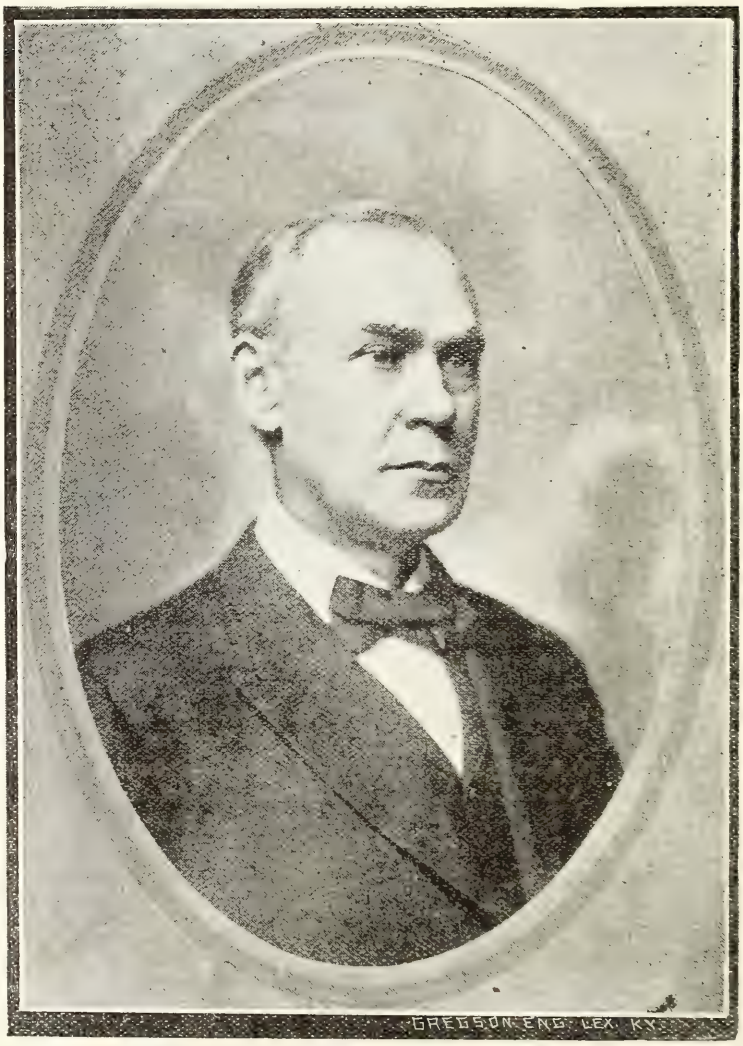
Then this spiritual physician, seeing that they were as yet only babes in grace and suffering from that children's disease—division, to which strong men in Christ are immune—prescribed "Christ crucified . . . the power of God and wisdom of God." He further declares that he determined "not to know anything among them save Jesus crucified."

As Paul wrote, in another epistle, that he counted all things as refuse for Christ, so should every denominational leader in Christendom. I said recently, to the astonishment of some of my friends, that the only hindrance to Christian co-operation between Baptists and Disciples was ignorance or sin, or perhaps both. I simply gave the cause of the division at Corinth. The knowledge of Christ and his sole exaltation was the remedy; and the same, along with the removal of misunderstandings among the brethren here represented, would lead to such an affectionate co-operation as would convince the world that there is a new power in Christianity. I think the masses of our people are profoundly ignorant of the doctrinal views, one of the other. I can not think the trouble is perversity.

This leads me to advocate another essential step, namely, religious education of the masses. There are a million Disciples of Christ not yet enlisted in our own general missionary movement. I suppose there are three million Baptists not yet co operating with their great missionary enterprises. The Catholics are far ahead of us in teaching their religion. Our children are in the Bible school one hour each a week; theirs are taught religion six days out of seven. Perhaps nothing is so much needed at the present juncture in all our churches as religious education, not only in Scripture truth, but as to the Church, as to missions, and God's providence in the world.

If, in the great united national convention of the three bodies here represented, it were voted to join forces, how long would it be until the remote districts would get the news and get it straight? It took a hundred years of education to get us apart, and it will take persistent education for at least ten to bring us together; and we must not grow impatient, or weary in welldoing.

Take two illustrations of misconception



I. J. Spencer.

*Paper read before the joint congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples, Chicago, November 10-12, 1908.

on the part of Baptists and Free Baptists concerning doctrinal points in the teaching of the Disciples. One is the design of baptism; the other is the operation of the Holy Spirit. It has been said that, from the Baptist standpoint, these are the chief doctrinal differences. Of course, no one—nor ten thousand—can speak authoritatively as to what the body of Baptists, Free Baptists or Disciples do believe. But so far as I know, I shall here state the position of the Disciples on these two subjects, in order to a better understanding.

In connection with faith and repentance, baptism is a divinely appointed condition of membership in the Church, the body of Christ, in whom alone we have the remission of sins, the gift of the Holy Spirit and eternal life. We do not believe in baptismal regeneration, but in spiritual regeneration, through Christ, symbolized in baptism. We do not preach "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins," but, "Repent and be baptized into the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of sins." It is not baptism that saves, but the name of Christ only. For there is no other name whereby we may be saved. Ananias did not say to Saul, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins," but "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord." For it is written: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved," not "Whosoever is baptized shall be saved." The name of the Lord is the essential, meritorious and effectual consideration in connection with baptism and the remission of sins. That fact was the reason why Paul was glad he had baptized so few at Corinth, lest any should say he had baptized in his own name.

And concerning the Holy Spirit, we believe that he was sent to convict the world of sin, righteousness and judgment; that he testifies, not of himself, but of Christ and reveals his will. He dwells in the believer, and, if permitted, will abide with him in exceeding fullness, making intercession for him according to the will of God. He enlightens, quickens, regenerates, leads, comforts and strengthens the believer with might in the inner man; works in him to will and to do the divine pleasure, sanctifies and keeps him in living union with Christ. No greater gift can be granted to any man than the gift of the Spirit. Though he uses the Word of God in conversion and sanctification, we believe that he also works through Providence, through prayer and through godly persons, and we would in no wise limit his operations to the Word or to methods we can analyze and comprehend. I am sure that I voice the essential conviction of the great majority of my brethren in the foregoing statement of the two points of doctrine.

Dr. Charles H. Dodd, of Baltimore, furnishes an apt illustration in the story of two passengers in an old-fashioned stage-coach, who, entering at different stations and traveling together at night, in the darkness, as strangers, were astonished, when the morning dawned, to discover that they were brothers. So we "have been riding over the long, sad night ways. But the daybreak reveals the fact that we are brethren."

Another step to real and abiding union in Christ is lowliness. Without it men will not learn. The spirit of docility, humility and a willingness to serve others is strategic. When the oft-recurring inquiry arose in the little group of apostles as to who should be greatest, Jesus made a little child rebuke them. On the night of Jesus' agony in the garden, just preceding his prayer for union, he taught the most picturesque and beautiful lesson of humility. Simon Peter had not forgotten it—the contending group, the water, the basin, the girding, the earth-stains upon his feet, the resistance in his heart and the patient cleansing—all these were before his mind when he wrote to his brethren of the dispersion: "All of you gird yourselves with humility to serve one another; for God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." It was through the most obedient humilation, moreover, that Jesus came to his exaltation, to the name above every name and the worship above every worship. His church can reach its glory and its service among the nations only as it catches his spirit and follows his example. Joseph Cook said: "The church of the future must be the church that, girding itself, shall be willing to wash the feet of the lowliest saints."

Still another essential without which organic union would fail is the love of God. It is the best proof of a regenerate membership in the Church. Would it not indicate more love for the three bodies mentioned to join ranks than to remain separate? Does the world think that any custom, history or mere segment of doctrine is worthy of a place as exalted as Christ? Have any of us been baptized into any name but the name of Christ? If so, I am sure it was "alien immersion," without the promise of the Holy Spirit, and the subject needs, not a re-baptism, but a real baptism into the name of Christ.

Did not Jesus inquire, when he made Simon Peter a shepherd as well as a fisherman, concerning this greatest thing in the world, the disciple's supreme love for his Lord?

Soon after the Chicago fire I saw a large mass of metal, made up of steel tools, iron instruments and implements that had been fused together in the heat of that fierce conflagration. The peculiar character of each could be recognized, but the individual parts could not be separated. So, when the love of God shall have melted our hearts, they will cohere in Christ and no doctrine or doctor of divinity can force them apart. "When I was a child I spake as a child: I thought as a child. But when I became a man I put away childish things." Is our manhood still delayed? Is love not yet come to its throne?

Another step in the process of the right kind of getting together is superlative loyalty to Christ. As the spokes of a wheel approach each other as they approach the hub, so do we as we draw near to our Lord. Loyalty to him means his absolute supremacy. Elijah and Moses must disappear from the vision, and Jesus only abide. You can not serve God and denomination. You can not be suffered even to bid farewell to sectarian leaders. You can not in safety go back to bury your history, your traditions and your shibboleths. Let the dead bury the dead. If any man hate not his father's human creed and his mother's human sect, he is not worthy of his Lord. Except a man forsake all that he hath he can not be Jesus' disciple. Except he sell all he can not buy the Priceless Pearl.

But one says: "I can not sacrifice my principles for the sake of union." If any man's principles stand between him and Christian union, the sooner he adopts a new set of principles in harmony with God and the nature of things, the better.

Whatever is my own—my ignorance, bigotry, prejudice, Pharisaism, jealousy, idolatry or pride—I may legitimately surrender. But the gospel given me in trust, I must sacredly administer. Jesus himself was never loyal to any mere thing. He never centered himself and his disciples about any point or segment of truth. He was loyal to his Father. All authority is his, and where he speaks we speak; and where he is silent, we are silent.

Another imperative step is our Christian liberty. I imagine I hear some persons say, "We are Baptists, Disciples of Christ and Free Baptists, and were never in bondage to any man." If ye were free ye would not resist his will, obstruct his prayers or put him to shame before the world. Whom God hath set free is free indeed, and none can bind; and whom he hath bound none can set free. That may sound like Calvinism, but was not so intended. Dr. Dodd, in his admirable address at Bloomington, last April, before the Congress of the Disciples, referring to the providential meaning of this movement toward unity, quoted Prince Albert as saying often, to the young men of his day: "Young men, find out God's plan in your generation and then fall in with it." Then Dr. Dodd added: "We are caught in nothing less than the flood-tide of the Holy Spirit's fulfilling will. . . . I see nothing half so supernatural in this day of ours as this impulse toward fraternity and solidarity. It is impossible to resist it. I look upon it as the spiritual miracle of the times."

From India, China and Japan comes the pathetic cry: "We would see Jesus!" and the Master says "The hour is come that he should be glorified." But instead of presenting Christ, men lift up their denominational standards and obscure the view. The orientals want unity—and get divisions. But, as some one has said: "We can not export what we do not import." The Japanese say, "We are too poor to afford your American luxury of division. We want a united Church."

The man of Macedonia still stands across the sounding seas and calls for help. "Give us bread!" they cry, and we answer: "Trouble me not. The door is now shut, and I am with my denominational children in bed. I can not rise and give thee." But the pathetic appeal sounds on and waxes louder. It haunts our dreams. Let us answer together: "We will arise and give them as much as they need."

How suggestive is the determination of the apostles, elders and whole church in Jerusalem—the erstwhile narrow church—to send fraternal delegates to Antioch to carry the loving, loyal message: "It seemeth good to the Holy Spirit, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things." And how the whole church at Antioch "rejoiced for the consolation!" Let us deal likewise one with another.

Briefly, I would suggest further the following recommendations:

1. Let us heed the missionaries' pleading that the denominations of the west shall not be bound upon the east. Let us encourage our foreign missionary boards to promote union in every place where it may seem wise and commendable.

2. Let us confirm the feeble knees of

LOVE THYSELF LAST.

Love thyself last; a lonely child
Is waiting, calling for thy gift,
Pleading, beseeching for thy strong uplift;
Love thyself last.

Love thyself last; a thousand men
Are fallen 'neath the lash of pain;
And shall they call and call in vain?
Love thyself last.

Love thyself last; a continent,
Oppressed by shadows dark as night,
Is struggling upward toward the light;
Love thyself last.

Love thyself last; the Son of God
Waits sadly for you while he stands
Upbearing the centuries in His hands.
Love thyself last.

—J. M. Lowe.

all those who have gone forward to Christian union and rejoice at the moral and spiritual transformations resulting from the union in western Canada, where confirmed skeptics have been converted and are now teaching in Sunday-schools.

3. Let us inaugurate a campaign of education among our people, an exchange of pulpits, an exchange of Bible school literature, an exchange of fraternal delegations to all our missionary gatherings, an exchange of writers for the pages of our religious journals, an exchange of church and missionary news, and a free exchange of our religious editors.

4. Let us resolve to be courteous always and to practice the whole of the thirteenth of First Corinthians, item by item; to send to each other whole baskets of the fruits of the Spirit, and determine that never again will we misrepresent one another. Let us remember that no one writer has authority to speak for the Baptists, Free Baptists or Disciples of Christ, and that we should not hold the body to account for what one of its members does or says. It is not scientific. It is not legal. It is not scriptural. It is not fair. Rather do as some of us used to do, down in Kentucky—hold each man "personally responsible" for himself only!

5. I rejoice with you all at the overtures of the Baptists and Free Baptists, after the adjournment yesterday, which they made to the Disciples, to join with them, on equal terms in every way, in their Congress, and thus to make it both ours and theirs. I am happy, too, at the hearty, prompt and unanimous acceptance on the part of the Disciples present—both sides voting unanimously to recommend the coalition to all who are absent but who have a voice in the management of either institution.

So may it be that, whether Baptists, Free Baptists or Disciples, "all are yours and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." He that heareth the sayings of Jesus concerning union and doeth them is wise and is building upon the Rock.

Our Baptist Brother

By Roger L. Clark

Walking along the street one morning recently, somewhat abstractedly answering the questions my little boy was asking, and endeavoring to keep in mind the commissions I should forget upon pain of a decided domestic displeasure, I was not aware, until too late to intercept, that a gentleman and his wife were diagonally crossing the street, evidently with the intention of avoiding me. I had been expecting to meet this gentleman for some time, looking forward with pleasurable anticipation, and rather elaborately prepared for all the quips and turns of our prospective conversation—which was to be pleasant and brotherly. Since I suspect him of deliberately avoiding my anxious eye, I arise to a question of privilege. Despite the use of the first person singular, there is no personal unpleasantness involved; but rather the incident may be significant.

Early in this year the gentleman and his wife applied for membership in our congregation here. He was a Baptist minister. His wife had been a member of some undenominational mission in New York, and upon the reaffirmation of her faith I baptized her. After a careful inquiry into his character I gave him a commendation to a church in Kansas, where he had accepted a call to preach. He had been in correspondence with my predecessor here and represented himself as in harmony with our views.

A few months after he left us he returned. He had resigned his work and withdrawn his fellowship from us. He has been received as a Baptist minister, and was so recognized in this city. He withdrew from our brotherhood, according to his own statement, because we teach the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, deny the personal operation of the Holy Spirit in conversion, observe the Lord's Supper every first day of the week without scriptural warrant, and invite—or suffer—those who have no right to the Lord's table to commune with us. Since his wife has been again immersed, it must have been upon the ground that the prior baptism was at the hands of an unauthorized and schismatic minister, who has no right to administer Christian ordinances, so that it was irregular. No wonder when he met me his walk was biased.

Are these not the views of the typical Baptist regarding us? And is this not the explanation of that marked constraint with which Baptist preachers generally treat us. The probability is affirmative. It is no rebuttal to claim a deliberate misrepresentation of our position, or an unwillingness to understand us. To substantiate such a claim would require proof of a conspiracy of such an extent and duration as to reduce the effort to an absurdity. There are real differences between the Baptists and Disciples; so that, while the trend of the prayerful thought of many in the two brotherhoods is towards union, some radical divergencies must be counteracted before we can approach the authoritative Word in the same mind and judgment.

Paradoxical as the fact really is, the difficulty is to ascertain the positive teaching of each body on every point of divergence. It would be easy to select twenty prominent ministers from among the Baptists and twenty from among us who would reach an agreement so fully and promptly that the union of the two brotherhoods would seem to require only the effort. When, however, the ten thousand preachers in our brotherhood and the twenty thousand Baptist preachers are considered, what basis of agreement can be made practicable without serious defection? Should we come to an understanding on any point of difference, there would be a respectable minority on each side dissenting. Furthermore, the scholarship and prominence in the two bodies can not directly determine the matter. The current of union will begin its course when the rills of unity from the "Jones Creek Baptist Church" and the "Spring Branch Christian Church" turn toward each other. The very strength of our congregationalism is the inertia to be overcome.

These points of difference are Baptistic, rather than corresponding to complimentary peculiarities of the Disciples. The Baptists have a history of which they are rightly proud; they have through much tribulation established a cause which they believe to be that of the Christ. To be faithful to Baptist history and practice is not, therefore, sectarian loyalty, but fidelity to that faith once for all delivered to the saints. In the view which commonly obtains among men, "there are various religious societies—productive of much good—but only one true church." In much of their literature the Disciples are represented as schismatic Baptists, with a plea which is specious and plausible, and consequently the more dangerous.

Irrespective of the error of this attitude, it is the first approach to be studied. We must learn to appreciate the soreness of heart, the grief, and the bitterness engendered during the formative period of our Restoration and transmitted (to use a parallel which most clearly borders the true state of the case), as a religious feud. To witness the "defection" of hundreds of Baptist churches, the desertion of trusted Baptist preachers, and to see an innovation rapidly grow by the side of the church founded in the days of John the Baptist, would naturally call forth strenuous protest and long rankle in mind and heart. Some of us are tasting, even now, wormwood such as this. If the statistical report of our Centennial Secretary be correct, a faction among us has severed itself and will demand recognition as a distinct body in the next census. As a logical proposition we may esteem ourselves the better with those "cut off who trouble us." But in praying that we may all be one we must sorrow in shame that a movement designed to unite all Christians should experience a sloughing off within a hundred years. While sixty years ago controversy was the more acrimonious with the Baptists, the passing years have softened our hearts and modified our relations to each other. It is the Holy Spirit who has put into the hearts of many that mutual love and desire to be one in Christ.

Until there is a general and dominating desire for union it is useless to speculate upon the methods by which it may be effected. Baptists and Disciples stand for the same principles; but in a diverse manner. A comparative examination of each position will develop the fact that the first point of divergence lies in the definition of the term church, by which almost every peculiarity in Baptist teaching is determined. The Baptist attitude toward other religious bodies, the practice of "close"—that is, church—communion, the rejection of irregular—that is, non-church—baptism, and the expediency of a confession of faith, are affected by it.

With the Baptists the "kingdom of God," as in John 3:5, and "the church," in the extensive sense, are not synonymous. The reign of Christ comprehends the saved state. Were the "kingdom" and "church" identical, the consequences would be to an anabaptist abhorrent; for the doctrine of baptismal regeneration would be true in effect, excluding all the pious unimmersed from the hope of salvation. How far this consequence influences the Baptistic definition does not concern us more than to allow a right to necessary consequences—except in debate. That we, ourselves, have felt the pressure of this consequence is evident from the fact that we have been constrained to the use of unscriptural terms in making our position clear: i. e., the "formal" remission of sins, by an "appropriating" means which is only figuratively causal. There is little relief in reflecting that in the days of the apostles there were no "pious unimmersed;" there are millions now. To withhold fellowship because such are not members of the church, while admitting these to membership in the Kingdom, with equal rights to the joys of salvation, is logical from the Baptist standpoint and consistent with Baptist history; to deny fellowship because the unimmersed are not members of the church and to identify it with the Kingdom, so excluding them from any authoritative hope, appears sectarian in the hardest sense. It seems strange that this question should come between Baptists and Disciples, but it has been raised in some form during every Baptist protracted meeting the writer has attended.

There is nothing to be gained in minimizing our differences by referring to them as logomachies. But we may discover that our terms have been modified and our differences dissolved in a clearer light from the Word of God. With this end in view we may approach our Baptist brother in love and confidence.

By What Measure? By W. T. Moore

These are testing days. It is not remarkable that just at the close of a century of our religious movement there should be some discords in our notes of rejoicing. This is exactly in harmony with all history. When the sons of God came together, Satan came into their midst. When Jesus was here on earth, performing his great miracles, it was then that the whole demon world was stirred to its uttermost. Perhaps there never was a time when Satan's empire was more active than when Jesus was here in his personal ministry. Why then should we not look for some unpleasant things to be mixed with the good things during the Centennial year of our religious movement? We are just entering upon a time of great rejoicing, and according to the course of things, we may confidently expect some evil influences to become exceedingly active for the next twelve months.

Already there have been rumblings of the coming storm. Perhaps the cloud in the horizon is not bigger than a man's hand; nevertheless, it is a sign of a disturbance in our religious atmosphere. This disturbance shows itself in two directions. In the first place, there are those who seem to be inclined to drift away from the moorings which have heretofore held our people together. There are not many of these, but they have shown considerable activity, and they have refused, so far, to listen to the earnest counsel of their brethren. This is to be regretted, for some of these are royal men, and they could be most influential and helpful in carrying on our work; but it will really injure their usefulness by contending for what is by no means essential, and what is sure to be in the end divisive. This restlessness comes largely from not being well grounded in the plea for which we contend. Some of these men seem to have little knowledge of the principles which have guided in our movement up to the present time. Recently we had occasion to look through the library of one of these men, and to our surprise we did not find a single volume written by any of our brethren, or anything that definitely advocates the plea which we make. The library was full of excellent books, but they were, for the most part, on lines which have no particular reference to the special things for which we, as religious people, stand. Now we do not wish to be misunderstood. We certainly would not have our young preachers confine themselves in their reading to any narrow limit of books, much less to the very narrow limit of those written by our own brethren. But it surely is a rather bad sign when we find that our young men, who are to lead our churches, are not reading at least some of the books that set forth distinctly the principles for which we contend. This indicates one extreme; another is like unto it.

There are a few among us who read very little except what has been written by our own brethren, and usually they read those authors which present an extreme view of our plea on the conservative side. This latter class imagine that they have the right to excommunicate the former class, even without judge or jury. Surely we have a right to ask by what measure is this being done? We might go still further in our inquiry and ask, by whose authority is this thing done? We do not now stop to consider whether it should be done or not. Our difficulty is in being certain about the persons who are to do it. We have never yet had an official ecclesiastical court outside of our individual churches, and each church has jurisdiction over only its own members. This being the case, it is rather a new development in the progress of our religious movement to find men publicly withdrawing fellowship from their brethren without even referring the matter to the churches where these brethren belong. Ought not this child's play stop? Is it worthy of a great people, who practically moved the religious world during the 19th century until it was shaken from center to circumference? Are we not making ourselves ridiculous in the sight of our religious neighbors, as well as certainly violating one of the fundamental principles of our plea, which is to receive each other without respect to difference of opinion.

But, after all, these are only spots on the sun. No one need fear that these slight obscurations will break the light of the great principles which we advocate. Of course, these ugly things ought to be avoided if possible; but if offenses must come, those who bring them will probably be the chief ones to suffer. In the end our victory will be complete. While we strive earnestly ourselves, we may be sure that the evil one will not be idle; but he that is for us is greater than he that is against us, and, consequently, if we are faithful to the plea committed to our hands, we shall finally be victorious, no matter how dark some of the days may seem, or how some of our friends may turn either to the right or to the left.

The Unifying Power of the Cross (John 12:32)

An Abbreviated Report of a Sermon preached at the National Convention, New Orleans,

By Cephas Shelburne

"And it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin." Here our attention is arrested by the three great varieties of national life. The Hebrew, the Greek, the Roman had divided the world between themselves. In the divine and universal plan in the preparation of the world for the gospel these three great peoples of the world furnished the three civilizing forces there unified in the cross. The peculiarity of the Hebrew civilization was religion; the Greek, the culture of the intellect; the Roman, organization and government. The Greek quest was wisdom, it had to do with thought, and there it was emblazoned in the language of Greece. The Latin quest was power, it had to do with will—and there it was emblazoned in the language of Rome. The Hebrew quest was worship, it had to do with feeling—and there it was emblazoned in the language of Israel. Intellect, sensibility, will—the psychological division of the powers of the soul over which Christ came to reign, the embodiment and moving spirit in every social order and national life over which Christ must be sovereign. Thought, feeling, willing; these three powers, which had been preparing the world for the coming of Christ, had met in the cross of Calvary. Jewish prophecy, Greek philosophy, Roman law, found a meeting point in Jesus of Nazareth, and in the meeting had found their Master and Sovereign. He hung there, the Messiah of Jewish expectancy; the Logos of whom Plato of the Greeks dreamed and debated; the sovereign power for which the Roman eagles fought. A Hebrew of Hebrews, a Greek of Athens, the noblest Roman of all. Hebrew civilization had failed, Greek civilization had failed, Rome had failed. Powers of thought, powers of feeling, powers of will had met their doom; the time had come for a universal religion, a universal language, a universal government; and the man of the centuries was lifted up that he might draw all men unto himself. These expectations of "some one to come"; the great hope that throbbed in the soul of the world, and without which the human heart could not go on and beat; "the great divine idea moving onward with infinite patience to realization," had met on Calvary's Cross and found fulfilment in its inscription, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." To quote the eloquent Dr. Gunsaulus: "What a crisis that was on Calvary! The age-long battle between evil and good had reached Waterloo. The hour had struck for the decisive conflict. Every contest which the soul of man had felt from the beginning, every silent advance of right upon retreating wrong, every sharp defense of truth against error, every dreadful fight against sin, every bloody march upon selfishness, every terrible charge upon the beast, every defeat, every triumph, was but a prelude to this awfully tragic moment when the Son of God, nailed to the cross, was first to hurl the arrogant power of sin from that solemn height, and next to make the cross his undisputed throne."

My brethren, is not this idea and truth, the conquering and unifying power of the cross, being realized to-day? Is not this crucified Jew the sum of all religions, the master teacher, the supreme power? Whatever our estimate of man, Christ is the ideal character, who, through all the changes of history, remains a universal model. Mr. Lecky, in his "History of European Morals," says: "The three short years of the active life of Jesus have done more to soften mankind, and raise man's ideals, than all the disquisitions of philosophies, and all the exhortations of moralists." Strauss, the infidel, said: "The highest object we can possibly imagine is the Christ; never will it be possible to rise above him or to imagine anyone who should ever be equal to him." Benjamin Kidd, in his "Social Evolution," believes that he is the sole secret of our civilization and progress. Renan, beholding the beauty of his character, cried, "Between thee and God there is no other." Napoleon, master himself, gazes upon a greater Master and exclaims, "Between him and whatsoever else in the world there is no possible term of comparison. He astonishes me; his spirit overawes me, his will confounds me!" On a lonely isle of exile, upon barren Atlantic Rock, Napoleon, reflecting on the rise and fall of empires and thrones, broke forth: "Cæsar, Charlemagne and I founded empires upon force, and there are none to do us reverence! Jesus Christ founded a kingdom on love, and to-day there are millions that would die for him." Gladstone said: "Christ is the intellectual giant of the centuries. Without him the greatest man is a failure, with him the smallest man is a triumph." This great statesman and orator, this grand old man eloquent, could say, "All that I think, all that I write, all that I hope, yea, all that I live for, is based upon Jesus Christ, the central joy and influence of my poor and wayward life." Eight of the nine Justices of the Supreme Court are active Christians; the President of the United States and the three great nominees for this highest office in the gift of the people are defenders of the Faith from the public platform. Jean Paul Richter, the foremost German of his time, said: "Christ, the holiest among the mighty, the mightiest among the holy, lifted with his pierced hands empires off their hinges, turned the rivers of history into new channels, and still governs the ages." Theodore Parker stood in Westminster Abbey with earth's greatest spirits about him, and exclaimed: "I look upon Jesus Christ as the highest product of the human race. I honor intellectual greatness, I bend my neck to Socrates, Shakespeare, Newton, Hegel, and all the vast minds of my own day; but what are they all compared to Jesus Christ! They are as nothing." There is not a prominent, honest, intellectual man on the continent of Europe or America today that does not bow his head to the man Christ Jesus as the power of powers that moves and controls human society in all that is good and great. Emperor William, of Germany, in his striking address upon religion, said: "He who does not found his life upon Christ is a lost man. I rejoice that I have placed my whole empire, my people and my army, as well as myself and my house, beneath the cross and under the protection of him who said: 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my Word shall not pass away.'"

The mission of the preacher is to preach the word in loyalty to his Master, and to bring men under the power of the cross. The whole spirit of the age, the ringing watchword of our time is, "Back to Christ;" back to the church of the Apostles and to the old Jerusalem gospel. Back of creed and council and confessional; back of Rome and Oxford and Nice; back of Calvin and Wesley and Luther and Campbell; back of bishop and priest and pope; back of the Twenty-five Articles, the Thirty-nine Articles, the Westminster, Philadelphia and Augsburg Confessions of Faith. Back of him who is head over all things to the Church which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. The foundation of the Church and its salvation is a Person. What we need is not a new compass of truth but a new determination to steer straight by the old compass, which is the Word of God.

Let us back to Christ and him crucified: back to the fundamental truths of the gospel that have won every victory of the church in the past, that must win all the victories of the Church in the future. That is the truth before which all standards must be tried, and all articles of confession survive or perish; before which Calvin and Wesley and Luther and Campbell must bow their heads and yield obedience; before whom Nice and Trent, Augsburg and Philadelphia, Westminster and our universities, must stand or perish.

Hope for the world was born in the deed on Calvary. The pierced hands are no myth, the broken heart is no accident, the Calvary death is no theory, the open tomb is no fancy. The aim of the church must be to set forth the tremendous realism of the eternal priesthood of Jesus Christ. When we preachers get down to bed rock truths and give the people the gospel, what they expect to get in the church of Jesus Christ, they will come again. Let us remember that we have our commission to "preach the Gospel." There is urgent demand for a return to gospel certainty, a church that is sure of her position in the realm of religious truth. Too long have we been dwelling in the land of criticism and discussion and the valleys of incertitude. Our ministers everywhere need to preach Christ and him crucified. If they would cease discussing controversial questions, and tell their hearers how they may be saved for this life and the next, through him, there would be a rich harvest from their labors. After all, Christ and his work should be the paramount topic of the Christian pulpit. Christ the Saviour, Christ the perfect example, Christ our supreme king—there is matter in that one subject for the sermons of a lifetime.

All attacks of atheism, infidelity, agnosticism and destructive criticism have fallen and shattered upon the Rock of Ages. Forbid that we should say unkind things against any individual man who loves God and his fellow men and believes as much as he can of the Christian creed; but I must give it as my opinion that the Bible and Christianity stand or fall with miracles. Any views that express denial of the supernatural element in the Bible, that antagonize the miracles of the gospel, the resurrection of Jesus, destroy the very fundamental facts of the Christian faith. Let them flow, talk, debate, they help to drain the bog; and the church has nothing to fear from them. Many of these theories, doubts, skepticisms of a few years ago emptied themselves through the channels of talk and worthless newspaper discussions. Let those who are disposed to question, talk, talk, talk; and let us, who are in the business of saving men, preach, preach, preach!

The tone of our preaching is changing from intolerance to tolerance, from hatred to love. Once we were fighters. I remember very well the time when a minister of another denomination in the congregation was considered a fair target for any pulpit. Fainter and less frequent is the note of polemical bitterness. Smaller grows the desire to do God's service by vilifying from Christian pulpits the beliefs and practices of others. We are laying aside the weapons of warfare and are using the Sword of the Spirit. Old issues that never were important are being dropped and there is an increasing sense of brotherhood, and we are disposed to emphasize the things in which we agree. No intelligent ambassador for Christ attempts to commend the excellencies of his own sect by attacking the faults of another. The day of doctrinal warfare is drawing to a close; the old segregated church that arose out of Judaism is giving away before the larger faith and there is a rapidly growing sentiment in favor of Christian union. Sermons are losing their ire, sharpness and bitterness, and are growing in persuasiveness, sympathy, love. Doctrines once elaborated and formulated into creeds, and that became the battle ground and rallying centers for the denominations, are being surrendered as unimportant, and a new age is coming in; the new century is ringing in the Christ that was and is to be; the Son of Righteousness is rising on the world with healing in his beams. Less statement, less argument, less orthodoxy, but more Christ. Not by controversies, not by strife, not by creeds, not by ecclesiastical tyranny, but by the blessed influence of the indwelling spirit, leading us all to love the truth and to know the truth and to do the truth, must our divisions be removed and the churches regain their lost unity. Isaac Errett, of blessed memory, said that if the church was ever to unite and conquer the world, "it will not be in the mere holding of a creed, either human or divine; but by accepting the Christ and entering into his sympathies for the redemption of the race." It is not ours to formulate a union, to subscribe to union; but to feel union, act union, manifest union among ourselves. Unity! By all means; but before we shall ever realize it in any real spiritual sense, we must live unity, practice unity, and manifest unity ourselves, as well as preach unity. Before the Saviour's prayer, "that they all may be one," is answered there must be a widening sympathy, a deepening charity, a more tolerant and forgiving spirit in the family of God on earth.

This was the grand unity that characterized the early church. And when we catch the same spirit, are animated by the same great law of love, and are loyal to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, God is going to gather the broken fragments of a divided Christianity into one body, fold, family, church, under one head, Christ, "the head over all things to his body, the fulness of him that filleth all and in all."

My people, never despair; it is coming. Christ's prayer must be answered: "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." The nations are coming closer together, and beginning to realize a world community of interest. Brotherhood is the watchword, the real shibboleth of our day, the ideal that all leaders of vision are preaching and toward which all peoples are tending. The preachers of vision and breadth in all denominations are dreaming, talking and preaching church unity; the movement of the churches is all this way. Mr. Hillis says: "Gone forever the day when the church can be split into 160 sects. The whole spirit of the age is against this disunion and separation. The time has fully come for the church of Jesus Christ to unite. The two outstanding words to-day are organization and co-operation. The united church of Christ is the church of to-morrow. Slowly we are coming toward the church of Jesus Christ, and at last all again will be one accord at one place—the place will be the cross of Jesus Christ, and there we will stand face to face, and all will have come into the unity of faith." There is becoming a fuller, more harmonious development of our humanity; greater freedom from narrowness and prejudice; more width of thought, more expansive sympathies, larger and sweeter brotherhoods, more of the Christ-spirit. Everywhere the ancient law of hate is yielding to the supreme law of love, human wisdom to the Sermon on the Mount, human resentment to arbitration, reciprocity and the golden rule; and men are saying: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." My brethren, if anything is certain about the teachings of Christ and his inspired apostles, it is that this old world is to be reunited under the Christ, and that peace and order shall reign throughout the realms and orders of existence. The church of the future will not be Catholic or Protestant, Armenian or Calvinist, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, Lutheran or Congregationalist; but simply Christian; a simple church, a loyal church, a loving church, without formulas or set dogmas; without pope or priest or bishop or authoritative counsels of any sort. Our religion will become deeper, purer, more spiritual and Christlike. There will be no name but Christian, no creed but the Christ, no rule of faith and practice but the New Testament, no bond but Love, no test of fellowship but faith and obedience to the Christ, no head but him. The dogmas which have separated communion from communion will fall away like autumn leaves before the fresh winds of God. Men will not grieve to see the old things go, for a larger hope and sweeter faith will be theirs.

THE WIDER LIFE. By J. R. Miller, D. D. Pp. 285. Cloth, 85 cents net. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.

What Dr. Miller writes always commands attention. His message is to the churchgoer as well as the business man. His new book proclaims the gospel of progress. He recognizes the trend of the times, but classifies as the larger Christianity "everything that will add to the fullness and completeness of character. It excludes nothing but what is sinful; it includes whatsoever things are true."

THE WILL TO BE WELL. By Charles Brodie Patterson. Pp. 254. Price, $1.20 net. Funk & Wagnalls.

This is a wholesome book. Its keynote is that it is easier to go with the law than to put oneself in opposition to it. Much study has been given during the last year or two by those who are not faddists to the subject of the influence of the mind on bodily ailments. The author of this book is not a Christian Scientist. The distinction he makes is that Christian Science shows that the visible world is mortal mind. The "new thought" for which he stands declares the visible universe to be an expression of God's handiwork. Christian Science asserts that sin, sickness and death have no existence. The new thought affirms that they have an existence, but their existence is only limited, and their destruction comes from right thinking and right living. Christian Science stands for a woman and a book. The new thought movement stands for God manifested through the souls of men, for the eternal love of creation and for the absolute freedom of the individual to work out his own salvation. These are some of the differences pointed out. That there is much in the philosophy of a willingness to be well, no one who has given any thought to the subject will protest.

THE BIBLE UNDER TRIAL. By James Orr. Price, $1.75 net. A. C. Armstrong & Son.

Dr. Orr is Professor of Apologetics and Systematic Theology of the United Free Church College, of Glasgow. He is, perhaps, the most distinguished of the scholars writing in rebuttal of the advanced school of Biblical criticism. He shows the absurdity of extreme critical positions, yet he is a "higher critic" himself, though his view of the authorship and reliability of the Old and New Testament books is nearer to the traditional view than to the critical one. However, it is not by any means the position of inerrancy which is held by the majority of those who are flinging stones at the critics, and who quote Prof. Orr glibly as being on their side. For instance, on page 210 we learn that the astronomy of the Bible is not scientifically correct; on page 216, that the early genealogies must be interpreted with great latitude. Other quotations could be given to show that this conservative scholar hardly occupies the ground that the men who protest most loudly stand upon. But his books are all extremely valuable, and he is a thinker to be reckoned with. In this volume he considers the relations of the authority of Christ to the authority of the Word, and finds these two forms to be in harmonious accord. He skillfully plays off one critic against another, showing how wild are some of the hypotheses of destructive critics, and how little has been added to the difficulties of the believer by exploration, while how much has been brought to the defense of the book by the discoveries in archæology and with the spade. He is a student of learning. He has an acute mind and his book is worth much.

Her arrangement is admirable; her scholarship unquestioned; her survey very complete, while she knows the teacher's needs as no one can who writes only from theory. SOME RECENT PHASES OF GERMAN THEOLOGY. By John L. Neulsen. Price, 75 cents. Jennings & Graham, Cincinnati.

Since the writing of this book, Professor Neulsen has been made a Bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In three lectures he presents here a popular outline of present tendencies of German theological thought. First he praises the progress in regard to the Bible; the second treats of the personal work of Christ, and in his third lecture he traces the effort to establish the "modern" positive school of theology which seeks to mediate between the conservative and radical theories. Professor Neulsen thinks the next great battle will be over experimental psychology. One of the most striking parts of this little book are the pages where he digresses to speak of the "myth of Theodore Roosevelt." In this he applies the same principle of analysis and comparison to a modern personality, which Professor Jensen uses to reach the conclusion that Jesus never lived upon the earth.

THE CALL OF THE WATERS. By Catherine Crowell. Pp. 157. Price, 50 cents, net; paper, 30 cents, net. Fleming H. Revell.

This study of the frontier belongs to the Home Mission Study Course, which the interdenominational committee presents as a text book. Of course, it is but an outline picture. No more interesting subject could be presented than this, telling of the ever pressing forward on the frontier from the Atlantic to the Pacific. How the church has been in it, this book indicates. Topics on research work are suggested, questions are asked, and pointers given for wider study.

THE BUILDING OF THE CITY BEAUTIFUL. By Joaquin Miller. Price, $1.50 net. Albert Brandt, Trenton, N. J.

This is a delightful volume in get-up and content. "The Poet of the Sierras" makes his story the medium of a keen, but sympathetic analysis of our weak human way of living the Lord's prayer. He unfolds a dream of an attempt to realize the literal heaven on earth, and his treatment is highly poetic and pervaded by the spirit of justice and altruism.

A LITTLE LAND AND A LIVING. By Bolton Hall. Price, $1.00. The Arcadia Press, New York.

The author is a promoter of "back to the land" idea. A year or more ago he wrote a book called "Three Acres and Liberty," but as no one volume could exhaust the subject in which he is interested he has produced another. It is a revelation of what can be done by intensive farming. The book is interesting, whether one be seeking to make his living from the land or not. If it were in the hands of every farmer it would mean money in his pocket, while it offers suggestions to the poor man as to how he can provide a reasonable sustenance.

MISSIONARY METHODS FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS. By George H. Trull. Price, 50 cents net. The Sunday-School Times Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

The year 1909 ought to mean much for missions from the fact that our Bible schools will study Acts of Apostles. Every school should have this book for the teachers to read. It tells how to interest the young people in missions. It tells how to plan the work, and then how to work the plan; and it gives a great number of plans that have worked. The appendices give programs and orders of service, charts and diagrams.

THE UNFOLDING LIFE. By Antoinette Abernathy Lamoreaux. Price, 75 cents net. Religious Publishing Co., Chicago, Illinois.

Those who have heard Mrs. Lamoreaux lecture will welcome this charming and informing book. Those who have never heard her will yield to her charming art as they read. It covers in a very satisfactory way the problems of the developing child. It will help the teacher to understand the child, and to know the child is indispensable to good teaching.

Our Budget

—"The king is dead!"

—"Long live the king!"

—Exit, 1908; enter, 1909.

—Let us make the year 1909 the greatest year in our history as a religious movement, as it is destined to be the most memorable because of our Centennial.

—The amount of news from all parts of the world pouring in upon us more than exhausts the capacity of our paper. We are compelled to hold over every week news of importance. Let us double our circulation and add eight pages to the size of our paper.

—We are receiving many words of commendation and New Year's greetings which we are holding over. We shall try to find room for them in a later issue. Meanwhile our friends have our sincere thanks for these evidences of their appreciation and good will.

—Now is the time of year, pre-eminently, for our friends to increase our list of subscribers in their congregations. Will not each friend of the paper kindly constitute himself an agent and secure a few additional names for us?

—We have so many good things in store for our readers the coming year that we are anxious to double the number of our readers. And this, be it remembered, is one of our Centennial aims.

—Read the two short stories written especially for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this week, "Answers to Pretty Girls' Questions" and "Joe's Tiger," the former for girls and women, the latter for boys.

—We are giving our readers extra measure this year—53 numbers in one volume! Now go to work and send us a list of new subscribers for that number.

—Miss Mary Garrison, youngest daughter of William Garrison, of Pond Creek, Okla., and a niece of the Editor of this paper, died suddenly at her father's home on December 18. She was a beautiful and sweet Christian girl, with bright promise of a useful life. Our tenderest sympathies go out to this stricken family.

—The cover page of our holiday issue, December 3, has brought us many compliments on its beauty and several requests for copies of the picture without the yellow tab roosting in the limbs of that beautiful tree. We can supply copies for a postage stamp each without the tab, but not without the name of the paper, if there be enough requests for them to justify us in sending same.

—The official board of the church at Milestone, Sask., Canada, has commended A. R. Adams, who served them as pastor ever since the organization three years ago.

—At the district convention held at Stamford, Texas, it was decided to effect a permanent organization and place another evangelist in this district.

—We have word of a good meeting at Haverhill, Mass., though the immediate results in numbers were not large. The work is carried on under great difficulty.

—Improvements have been put upon the church property at Ridgetown, Ont., where every department of the work is in a fairly prosperous condition. T. J. Reed is the minister.

—A sister in Iowa has sent the Foreign Society $1,000 to aid in the building of a Bible College at Vigan, Province of Luzon, P. I. The importance of this new enterprise is very great.

—The congregation of the First Christian Church at San Angelo, Texas, has, we learn, taken preliminary steps toward the erection of a fine new building to cost between $25,000 and $30,000.

—G. M. Goode, of Hartsburg, Ill., commends very highly Z. M. Brubeck, who, though not very well known among the Disciples of Christ, possesses unusual power, he says, in preaching the gospel.

—After two and one-half years of service with the church at New Philadelphia, Ohio, C. B. Reynolds has accepted an unsolicited call to the church at Alliance, O., and enters upon his work immediately.

—C. F. Ward, who edits the Advance at Liberty, Mo., and preaches for the Barry and Gower congregations, filled the pulpit recently at Liberty during the absence of R. G. Frank, who was in a meeting at Excelsior Springs.

—The ladies of the Central Church, New Castle, Pa., recently issued a beautiful calendar containing pictures of our three churches of the city, with their ministers, Sunday-school superintendents, Dr. T. W. Phillips and Dr. Thayer.

—The young ladies' Centennial Bible class of the Bellevue Christian Church, Pa., have issued the first number of a church bulletin which gives promise of being serviceable. William Ross Lloyd is the minister of this congregation.

—A second teacher's training class is being organized at Table Grove, Ill., with a membership of between fifty and sixty. The first class graduated twelve. Marion Stevenson's book will be used, and F. S. Nichols will be the teacher.

—M. M. Davis, though he has not quite recovered his full strength since the operation he had to undergo, yet feels in better health than for some years. He is taking things quietly and devoting his energies at present to literary work.

—W. F. Richardson, pastor of the First Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., is visiting his wife, son and daughter at Roswell, New Mexico, through the holidays. His wife and son are there for their health, and he reports them as improving nicely.

—Cephas Shelburne read a paper before the ministers' association at Dallas, Texas, on the subject, "Christian Science, An Examination into Its Claims." The paper was highly commended by the forty preachers, evangelists and editors who heard it.

—In a budget paragraph last week the printer made us say that John L. Lewis, of Shawnee, Ohio, reported the church there as much pleased with him. This information did not come from Brother Lewis, but from one of his elders, and this explanation is due Brother Lewis.

—Ward Russell is pleased with the outlook at Bartlett, Tex., where there has just been the annual roll call. The weather was unfavorable, but there was a large percentage of the membership in attendance to answer to their names. Four people joined the church, and there were seven new scholars in the Bible school.

—J. O. Shelburne, who has succeeded M. M. Davis in the pastorate at the Central Church, Dallas, Texas, has already taken a fine hold of the work there. Brother Knight, who has been associated with Brother Shelburne in the evangelistic fields, continues with him, doing personal work and having charge of the music at the Central.

—J. C. Archer and wife, of Ohio, recently sailed from New York for Jubbelpore as missionaries of the Foreign Society. Mr. Archer has gone out to devote his life to the work in the Bible College at that station. His robust health, his complete consecration, his scholarly attainments, all eminently qualify him for the responsible position.

—The Lebanon (Mo.) Rustic reports an interesting service at the Christian Church there recently conducted by the ladies of the C. W. B. M., and a meeting on the evening of the same day by the brotherhood of the church. Brother E. L. Ely, the pastor, is reported as having given an eloquent address on the occasion, which deeply impressed his hearers.

—A good meeting has just been held with the church at Hinton, W. Va. The church building there has recently undergone repairs, and is now in first-class condition. The membership is united in its efforts and desires. This congregation is one of the largest in the city, and its work under the ministry of F. H. Scott moves forward in an encouraging way.

—C. A. Watkins, pastor of the Church of Christ, Elmore, O., commends to the churches who may need a pastor, Brother Fred Gamble, Toledo, O.—"a middle-aged married man with experience and worthy character, a strong Bible scholar, and able preacher." Address him as above, Box 434. He prefers Canada or the Northwest, but will consider work anywhere.

—Our readers will be interested in the account of the proposed Centennial by the Australian churches as given elsewhere by Brother Alan Price. Notice the hearty invitation extended to American Disciples, and plan to go, if you can do so. The Editor of this paper is "almost persuaded" to go himself, if he can arrange for a suitable "supply" during his absence.

—A good meeting has just been closed with home forces at Mitchell Park Christian Church, St. Joseph, Mo. The pastor, C. A. Lowe, is especially proud of the Bible school work. The basement has been so arranged that every class has a separate room. The school is more than twice as large as formerly, and gives promise of greater growth and more effective teaching.

—James Ware, of Shanghai, China, is now on a trip to Australia, where he will visit the churches. He will return by way of America, reaching this country in February or March next. He has been a missionary of the Foreign Society in China for nearly twenty years. The Australian brethren are sure to give him a cordial reception; they made a special request for a visit from him.

—Dr. Charles Hastings Dodd, who made the great union speech at our Bloomington Congress, writes: "Let me tell you how much I am enjoying THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. That editorial of this week [last week], 'The Pentateuch of our Movement,' is a gem. I am clipping everything from your columns bearing on the union subject, praying as I do for the speedy realization of our hopes." There be many in these two great communions that share in this prayer and hope, and are joining hands across the now bloodless chasm.

—The church at Woodward, Okla., has pledged $1,350 this year for Christian education. This congregation is preparing to do away with the convention basket and all special methods of raising money, and inaugurate the tithing system. Ed. S. Mc Kinney, the minister, is to have his salary increased the coming year. In the latter part of January a meeting is to be conducted by Cooksey and Miller.

—The missionaries in China gave Dr. Z. S. Loftus, late of Nashville, Tenn., a cordial reception. He is delighted with the outlook. He will proceed in the near future to Batang, on the border of Tibet —more than 2,000 miles interior from Shanghai. This is probably the farthest interior mission station in the world. He will be associated with Dr. Shelton and wife, and J. C. Odgen and wife.

—It is an interesting letter which we publish this week from New Zealand by Brother E. T. Edmonds. The progress of the temperance sentiment and temperance legislation in that wide-awake and progressive land is very gratifying, and will bring courage to the hearts of temperance workers in this country. Churches in need of a strong pastor about March 1 will note the date of his return to this country.

—At Watseka, Ill., a great work is being done. The largest offering ever given by the Sunday-school for state missions has just been made. Last year it was $33.10, while this year it expanded to $110.55. Ellmore Sinclair, the minister, recently exchanged pulpits with Brother Lookabill, of Remington, Ind., who made the announcement of his wedding. He reports a good work being done by the pastor there.

—In a personal letter from Miss Caroline E. Pope, whose report of the Mid-Indian convention occurs elsewhere, she says: "Personally I can say, and I praise his Holy name for it, that he led me to India not only to lead others to himself, but that I too might see more of his fullness." This, we are sure, is the feeling of many of our missionaries, for in giving themselves to Christ's service he has given himself to them in a larger measure.

—Prof. A. C. Gray, of Eureka College, has been granted the degree of M. A. of the University of Michigan. He went to Eureka in September from Ann Arbor, where for two years he was pastor of the Christian Church, and a student in the university. We hear that his work in Eureka College is meeting with splendid success. He has supplied, too, some of the leading churches in Illinois since going there, and the reports from his work are encouraging.

—There is an excellent spirit at Delphi, Ind., where the church has been making history. The membership has been materially increased, and its influence in the community more than doubled. The new building dedicated October 18, by L. L. Carpenter, is the most beautiful in the city. This property is valued at $12,000, and the entire cost of the property has been provided for. A. A. Honeywell is, no doubt, a very happy pastor as he is a deserving one.

—C. E. Wells, pastor of our church at Chariton, Ia., delivered the union Thanksgiving address in the Baptist church there on Thanksgiving day. It was highly appreciated, and the attendance was the best that this service has drawn in many years. Eight new names were secured for membership in the auxiliary on C. W. B. M. day. The church members have shown their appreciation of the pastor and his wife by a surprise visit to their home, bringing many tokens of esteem.

—One who signs himself simply "A Friend," but who is known to us, sends an account of the fiftieth anniversary of William H. Dean and his wife, which was celebrated by many friends of the aged couple in the Church of Christ in Henderson, Mich., on December 9. Visitors from different parts of the state and other states were present. An interesting program was rendered, and the following ministers took part: C. M. Keene, R. R. Cook, W. L. Demming, E. Sias and W. J. Borden. Mr. and Mrs. Deane came from Canada in 1860 and for a number of years he has been an elder in our church at Henderson.

—W. H. Kern, of Barry, Ill., after congratulating the Editor on the complete recovery of his health and on the stand the paper has taken in reference to recent issues says: "Keep up the good work for unity among ourselves. What a power in the world we can be in the hands of God for the conversion of this world, if only we are all large enough to respect one another's opinions and keep the unity of the faith!" If these conditions existed there would be no limit to what God could accomplish in us and through us. To bring about such conditions has been, and is, the steadfast aim of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—The new Christian Church at Oceanside, Cal., was dedicated December 6, by Grant K. Lewis, who remains to assist Oscar Sweeney, the pastor, in special meetings. Prof. B. P. Stout, of Philadelphia, one of the best known singing evangelists, is leading the music. The membership of the church was only thirty-three at the time of dedication, and every department is in a hopeful and growing condition. William Woodruff, the superintendent of the school, is planning organized classes and other improvements. Building plans were suspended while a union of the Baptists and Christians was being considered. As this was not apparently practicable, the building project was pushed.

—Rally Day at Fruita, Cal., was a great occasion for the new church. There were 103 in attendance at the Bible school, while a large audience heard a good sermon on "Put First Things First." A number of members and friends ate dinner in the tabernacle. The evening service was in the hands of the school, and a splendid offering was received. Joseph Bogue, the minister, says it means much to have a superintendent who knows how, and who has a mind to do. Mrs. Lee Davis has charge of the school, and made a great success of this day. The Baptist minister and his people participated in the service. Brother Bogue recently had the pleasure of baptizing a young lady in the Grand Junction Church.

—A. M. Chamberlain writes that his father, A. B. Chamberlain, so widely known in the brotherhood as one of our ablest ministers, died on the morning of Dec. 19, after three weeks' acute progress of heart debility. He was nearly seventy-eight years of age, but was actively engaged in pastoral duties at Throopsville, New York, until less than a month ago. His ministry covered a period of nearly a half century. His son writes of him: "He never hesitated to endure hardness as a good soldier. He was content with his wages. Those who were close to him in life and death feel that he earned promotion. That which he preached for fifty years did not fail to give solace both for him and us when the time of his departure was at hand."

—Many of our readers remember with affection Brother John Burns, for many years in the publishing business in this city. He had had the misfortune to have both his feet amputated, and for some time has been in the Jewish Hospital in Philadelphia, where he is receiving every care. In a letter from his son, Walter S. Burns, under date of December 15, he writes: "Father takes great delight in receiving THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and seeing the progress that the church is making. His health is remarkably good, and he sends the kindest Christian regards to all his friends." His son is the Financial Attorney for Investment Securities, and has his office in the Drexel Building in Philadelphia. The Editor had the pleasure of meeting him and his good wife at church during his recent visit in that city.

—A. H. Seymour, Arlington, South Dakota, reports what he says is believed to be the first church institute ever held among the Disciples of Christ in South Dakota, which was held in the Highmore Church, December 15, 16. W. M. Roe, who is pastor of that church, arranged for the institute, and was chosen to preside over it. There was an interesting program in which G. W. Knight, pastor at Sioux Falls, W. S. Elliott, of Brookings, and J. E. Parker, corresponding secretary of missions in the state, and others participated, discussing practical topics covering the needs of the field. It was decided unanimously to make this institute an annual affair to be held in the central part of the state, and the hope was expressed that other sections of the state might be induced to hold similar meetings. We regret that the necessities of our space compelled this condensation.

—At the Temperance Convention of Missouri, an association was organized to secure the submission of a constitutional amendment to the vote of the people of Missouri prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages. An interesting meeting of this association was recently held in St. Louis, and at the executive session, committees were appointed and plans perfected for a general forward movement all over the state. We understand that the legislation is to be asked to enact a city, district and county unity option law, and, also, for the submission of a constitutional amendment to the vote of the people. If the legislation will not submit such an amendment, Dr. W. B. Palmore informs us that the association will at once proceed to secure the right number of signatures for its submission through the "initiative and referendum." Charles M. Hay, of Fulton, Mo., is the corresponding secretary, and President Million, of Hardin College, Mexico, Mo., chairman of the executive committee.

—P. C. Macfarlane, having taken up the work in connection with organizing our business men for Christian work, necessarily had to resign his pastorate at Alameda, Cal., which has been one of the most successful works on the western coast. Though this church's burdens are heavy, it is united and thoroughly equipped for work. It has just called H. J. Loken, of Colusa, one of our best educated men in the west, and a practical, consecrated worker. He is a graduate of the University of California, making in his closing examination the Phi Beta Kappa, the admission to which rests solely on the basis of distinctive scholarship. Brother Loken, who will take charge of the work at Alameda about January 15, also did post graduate work at Harvard, where he won the Billings prize in oratory and sermonizing. Brother Macfarlane, who has become known to the wider brotherhood through his energetic work on behalf of the San Francisco fund, will preach his farewell sermon to his present congregation on January 17, and will locate in Kansas City, which will be the headquarters of the men's brotherhood movement, the first week in February.

Revising the Church Record.

In August THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST published a plan proposed by the Hillside Church of Indianapolis for the revision of its church register, with a request for criticism and suggestions from the Editor and readers. Profiting by these criticisms and suggestions the elders modified their plan somewhat.

A letter was sent to every one whose name was on the register whose address was known. After stating the mixed condition of the records owing to the fact that they had never been systematically revised, the letter continued:

In order that we may find out just who is interested in the church, and wishes to continue in fellowship with it, we call a "Covenant meeting" on Sunday morning, October 4, 1908. At this meeting the roll will be called of every one that is now on the church register; and a solemn covenant service conducted.

We request all who wish their names enrolled upon the new church register to be present to respond to their names at the roll call and to participate in the covenant service.

Please fill out the covenant card and bring it with you. If you can not be present at the service, on account of infirmity, absence from the city or other unavoidable hindrance, will you please notify the minister, Charles M. Fillmore, 1836 Commerce avenue, that he may report for you when your name is called. Please sign and return to him at the same time the enclosed "Covenant Card," that you may thus share in the covenant service in spirit, even though absent in body. We also ask you, wherever you may be at the hour of the covenant service, to offer special prayer at that time for God's blessing upon Hillside Christian Church.

If you are not present at the "Covenant Service," and fail to sign the "Covenant Card," will we not be justified in believing that you do not wish to have your name recorded upon our new church record?

Hoping to greet you at this service, which we believe will mark the beginning of a new era in the history of our beloved congregation, and asking that you be constant in prayer for God's power and wisdom to be given us abundantly for his service, we remain, in humility and faith. [Signed by the Elders.]

The covenant was as follows:

By the grace of God, I hereby covenant with the members of the Hillside Christian Church, Indianapolis, Ind., to continue steadfastly with them in the teaching of Jesus, in the fellowship, in the breaking of bread and in the prayers.

As the Lord prospers me I will lay by in store that on the first day of the week I may regularly contribute to the support of the Hillside Church.

The covenant service consisted of a carefully prepared and printed program of responsive scripture readings, songs, etc. [A copy of this will be sent to any one inclosing postage for it.] Its rendition proved very impressive, preparing the people for a solemn and sincere participation in the roll call that followed.

One hundred and seventy-three people responded either personally or by letter. Still others reported at night, and still others during succeeding days. The elders took the list of those who did not respond, are visiting those who live in the community, and writing to the nonresidents and recommending to them that if they are not going to return to the Hillside neighborhood they ought to take letters and identify themselves with the churches where they live. Several have written for letters.

As a result we expect to have a bona-fide list of members on January 1, and among other things we will meet some of the Centennial aims. Among other things we will have "All the Church in the Bible School and as Many More." It is the unanimous opinion of our board that our plan is a success. Chas. M. Fillmore.

A Great Beginning of a Great Work in a Great Territory

The launching of the Arizona missionary work was a success beyond our hopes or expectations. When the writer went to Long Beach last August to spend his vacation and attend the Southern California and Arizona convention, he went determined that steps should be taken, looking toward the organization of the Arizona churches as a district of the Southern California and Arizona Society, with its own officers and board of control, to do definite work in Arizona. To this end a convention was called to meet in Tucson November 26, 27 and 28, for the purpose of organization. Meanwhile the writer wrote hundreds of personal letters to the churches and isolated brethren all over the territory, getting information about scattered brethren, urging attendance at the convention and asking for funds to support an evangelist to go into the field. As a result of this effort and the co-operation of the Arizona preachers, the report at Tucson showed more than $500 raised and considerable more in sight. The pledges as reported, though incomplete in each church, are as follows:

Christian Woman's Board of Missions	$100 00
Tempe	138 50
Phenix	100 00
McCabe	48 00
Douglas	44 00
Bisbee	42 00
Miss Sarah Gilman, Blackwater	25 00
Brethren of Mesa	15 00
Total	$512 50

We hope the completion of the canvass in the churches will add $200 or more to this. Then when the May offering is added to this we will feel perfectly safe in employing an evangelist to go into the field and establish churches.

The convention met at Tucson as planned and was a success from start to finish. W. H. Salyer, of Tempe, was elected president and W. Wilson, of Tucson, secretary. The program was carried out with as great vigor and enthusiasm as though there were a thousand delegates present. Mrs. Reba B. Smith, of Whittier, Cal., president of the Southern California and Arizona C. W. B. M.; Grant K. Lewis, of Long Beach, Cal., corresponding secretary of the California Missionary Society, and E. W. Thornton, Sunday-school specialist of California, all gave of their best to the program and business of the convention. All who know them would understand that that with which they are connected would be a success.

Brethren Lawrence Williams, of Phenix; W. E. Spicer, of Bisbee; A. B. Carpenter, of Douglas, and the writer, all had places on the program, which they filled to the credit of our cause in Arizona. The brethren decided not to cumber themselves with a constitution, by-laws and other unnecessary trappings at present, but to carry on the work for the next year, under the direction of an executive and advisory committee. To this end resolutions were adopted as follows:

1. That the Arizona Churches of Christ support an evangelist to work for the permanent establishment of Churches of Christ in Arizona.

2. That "all things may be done decently and in order," we recommend that an executive committee of five, who live near together, be appointed for the ensuing year, to consist of a chairman, a secretary, treasurer and two others; and an advisory committee of corresponding members consisting of one member from each church; and the corresponding secretary of the Southern California and Arizona Christian Missionary Society, and one member of the C. W. B. M.

3. That the brethren be asked to contribute to the support of the evangelist, and that audited reports of all business matters be supplied the churches.

The executive committee appointed to have this work in charge for the ensuing year was as follows: Chairman, J. M. Stewart, Phenix; corresponding secretary, W. H. Salyer, Tempe; treasurer, L. A. Brewster, Tempe; Lawrence Williams, Phenix; F. M. Avis, Phenix.

The corresponding members are: Grant K. Lewis, Long Beach, Cal.; Mrs. Reba B. Smith, Whittier, Cal.; W. S. Austin, Tempe; A. B. Carpenter, Douglas; I. Wallace, Bisbee; T. W. Ballenger, Tucson; Berry Hall, McCabe.

We aim to engage a good evangelistic pastor and put him to work in some of our needy fields and keep him there until a church is finally planted, and a settled minister on the ground; then send him to the next point. To this end the executive committee is in correspondence with such men as have been suggested.

W. H. Salyer,
Cor. Sec.

Sentinels of the Rockies.

(Dedicated to Colorado.)

BY ELDER A. L. FERGUSON.

O the glory of the mountains
Like the billows of the main,
Lifted up in awful grandeur
From the border of the plain;
Silent sentinels of the Rockies
Pike, and Gray and Long, they stand,
Crowned with diadems of glory
Set by God's almighty hand.

Towering high above the wildness
Of the canyon, vale and plain,
Standing like great mountain monarchs
As in solitude they reign;
Types of Hattin and of Hermon
Which our Lord immortal made,
Glorious Son of God eternal
Who in Joseph's tomb was laid.

Storm-clouds roll upon your summits
Like to armies from afar,
Strong battalions, deep-toned thunders
Fiery lightnings red for war;
Then the Artist of the heavens,
Paints a scene of glory bright
Blending all the hues of sunset
In a picture of delight.

Mighty Sentries of the Rockies
Glorified with beams of light,
While below thee in the shadows
Stand the foot-hills in their might;
Lofty, lordly in your bearing,
Girt with clouds from out the sky,
All unmoved by streams of commerce
While the trains go thundering by.

Colorado! Colorado!
Grandly do thy mountains rise,
Beacons of a noble statehood
Ever moving toward the skies;
Lifting serf and slave of Orient
From the darkness and the crime,
To the pedestal of manhood!
Truly this is work sublime!

Herald forth to all the nations
That great boon of liberty,
Let this be our world-wide message—
God made man forever free;
Glorious heralds of the morning
When a race redeemed shall stand,
Joined in sweet and holy friendship
In the parliament of man.

The Prudential Girl of 1909.

The 1909 Prudential Girl calendar has just been issued. The picture on the calendar is reproduced in twelve colors from an oil painting by Albert Lynch.

The 1909 Girl is unusually attractive and portrays the true Prudential spirit shown when a person takes out life insurance to protect the home. She is sincere and homelike, honest and beautiful.

With soft blue eyes, strongly marked eyebrows, a well-moulded nose, full red lips and a mass of dark chestnut hair, the 1909 Prudential Girl is sure to attract the public as well as win a prominent place in the homes of the Prudential's millions of policyholders.

On the back of the calendar is a complete list of months and days for 1909 and a statement that you should protect your home through life insurance in The Prudential.

The Company announces that a free copy of the calendar will be sent to any one who writes to the Home Office, Newark, N. J.

Tithing Membership at Baltimore.

The greatest thing which has occurred in the nine-months' history of this work was seen last Sunday. We called for volunteers who would say, "I will go anywhere Jesus wants me to go—to the mission field, to the ministry, or remain where I am; Jesus' will shall be mine." We designated certain seats in the front of the church. They were filled, then others, and others. We counted when they had come; there were nine. Two more told me afterwards they would go. This was eleven. Five of the eleven were baptized under the present ministry. Three of these will leave at once and enter the School of the Evangelists, and one will enter the Indianapolis training school as soon as it opens. Others will follow from time to time.

We opened the work here nine months ago. There were no members then; now we have 95. Of these eleven volunteer to go anywhere. This is better than one in ten. We feel that we have tithed our membership. Let every church tithe its membership—a splendid aim for our Centennial.

The New Home for the Children of Our Missionaries.

No doubt many are already planning to make special gifts to worthy causes before the close of our first century. One of our youngest national interests asks your assistance that it may be founded on a self-maintaining basis before our Centennial next fall.

It has always been the case that children of American parentage could not remain long in the heathen lands where missionaries labor. Climate, heathen conditions and lack of opportunity for education make it necessary to bring the children of missionaries back to America. A home must be provided for their care. Our religious neighbors have long since established such homes. We have reached that stage in missionary growth where the same provision must be made. Action taken at the national convention at San Francisco authorized the Foreign Society to establish such a home. Hiram, O., was selected as the location and it was made a memorial to the lamented G. L. Wharton, our first missionary to heathen lands.

This home asks you to help it but once and that to build it and provide a small endowment. The missionaries will pay for the board and clothing of their children. Your contribution will go to a permanent work to do good through all the years to come. These are children of heroic parents who have sacrificed enough. We can and must relieve their heartache and anxiety for their children. William Remfrey Hunt took his little girl to England and put her in an English home because our home was not ready when he and Mrs. Hunt returned to China. This ought not to be.

The home can not be established without funds. Part of the $25,000 needed has been provided. The local committee having the work in charge must have the money or the assurance that it will be forthcoming within a year. The committee consists of well-known brethren, some of whom are among the largest donors to this work. They are: President Miner Lee Bates, Hiram; A. R. Teachout, treasurer O. C. M. S., Cleveland; S. H. Bartlett, formerly secretary O. C. M. S., Painesville; John E. Pounds, Hiram, and W. H. Cowdrey, Cleveland. The home will be owned and controlled by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

Will you not help the work? Send a contribution or the promise of one at once so that the committee may know what to count on. The contributions have ranged from $1,000 down to small sums. Every contribution helps. Send or promise what you can. Remember we ask aid but once from you. Send your offering or pledge to the Wharton Memorial Home, Hiram, O., or write to me if you wish to make inquiry.

An Ambition Realized.

It has been the desire of the Board and the Corresponding Secretary to put a state worker in each of the seven districts. In every annual report since the state was redistricted, this has been set down as one of the supreme ambitions. We are happy to say that this is to be no longer a dream, but a reality. Beginning with January 1, each district will be supplied with a man competent for the work in hand.

First District, Kansas City, F. L. Bowen, supported by the Kansas City Mission Board; 2nd District, W. S. Hood, Clinton, a living link, supported by one of our faithful men; 3rd District, E. H. Williamson and wife, living link, supported by South St. Church, Springfield; 4th District, Horace Siberell, Cape Girardeau; 5th District, St. Louis, G. E. Ireland; 6th District, G. L. Harbord, Monticello; 7th District, the man chosen, but arrangements not all complete, and his name is reserved.

Besides these we have Joseph Gaylor, Springfield, as State evangelist, his territory being state-wide; J. Jones, evangelist, in Pettis and Benton Counties; J. H. Jones, Ash Grove, evangelist in the Bolivar District. This makes ten men besides the missionary pastors that we are helping in various parts of the state. Your Board has been urged time and again to take this step, but hesitated because of the lack of funds. It has been so strongly urged that if the Board would have faith enough to take the step, the brethren would supply the funds, that the move has been made. Now, what will the churches do about it? Will they give us the support needed to sustain this move? We put it up to the ministers and churches to endorse this step that has been taken.

The men selected for the new places are first class in every respect. Brother Harbord is especially commended as one of the best all around men your Board has been able to secure. He comes to the new work asking the generous support of all his brethren in the Sixth District. The new man for the Seventh District will, we are sure, meet the approval of all in that territory. The others in the other districts you have known for years and love them for their devoted service. Brother Gaylor, as evangelist at large in the state, enjoys the confidence of his brethren everywhere, and by his splendid service in the past, has won an enviable place in the affections of our whole people.

Surely with such a body of workers we may expect great things in state missions in Missouri this year. But again let us say, that finally the success of the whole scheme is in the hands of the Missouri brotherhood. The Board has the largest faith in the brotherhood that in this Centennial year they will give hearty and practical endorsement to this long step forward.

Why College Men Do Not Go Into the Ministry.

Under the above title, Dr. Shailer Mathews, dean of the Divinity School of Chicago University, fronts a problem before all religious bodies. From fifty-six letters received from Yale, Brown, Amherst, Harvard, Bowdoin, Dartmouth and University of Chicago Y. M. C. A. men, the following deductions were made: (1) There is in our colleges a growing anti-ministerial atmosphere. (2) There is a growing distrust of the church as a social institution. (3) There is a lack of heroic abandonment on the part of young men to a calling of self-sacrificing service. (4) There is a suspicion that a man can not have freedom of thought in churches and that he can not honestly think and teach inside the limits set by the authoritative creed of a given church. (5) The evidence of the decrease of religious faith on the part of these young men is all but absent. In all, the conclusion is that the church does not appeal to them as furnishing a career.

The problem thus fronted can only be solved, writes Dr. Mathews, by concerted effort: (1) To place before them the legitimacy of the ministry; (2) To bring about a deepening of their spiritual lives to the point of surrender of financial and other advantages; (3) to appeal to the heroic elements in their characters; and (4) to emphasize the opportunities and call of the ministry along the same lines as those which have been followed by the advocates of the volunteer movement. The Need of a Book and Tract Fund.

The Disciples so far have failed to meet a great responsibility. They certainly have no reason to be ashamed of the plea they are making; but they have, perhaps, depended too much upon its inherent strength to work its way to the public conscience. Success in any great enterprise is achieved only through wise and efficient means. Now it must be evident to every thoughtful Disciple of Christ that thousands of the more intelligent people can be reached only through good books. This is the day of the library. But what are we, as a people, doing to supply these libraries with such books as will disseminate the great principles for which we contend? Furthermore, are we using the only means by which many thoughtful people can possibly be influenced by sending them books to read?

What we need, just now, more than anything else, is a fund that will enable us to select the best books and tracts that have been written by our brethren and send these to such persons as may likely be influenced to accept the principles of the plea we are making. If a selection could be made of some of the best books that have been issued, and these could be sent to every minister in the United States, the result would be incalculable for good. It is scarcely probable that a fund can be supplied that will reach this end at once, and yet something can immediately be done in this direction. I propose that we begin the accumulation of a fund, the interest of which shall be used for the purchase and distribution of our best books and tracts. Even if $10,000 can be secured, this sum would be a beginning, and if it should never be larger, it would accomplish a great deal. I hope, therefore, there will be no delay about this matter. Let us raise that amount at once, and let it be placed under the control of a wise board of managers, to be selected by the donors, the details of which may be arranged just as soon as the fund is secured.

I propose, therefore, to contribute myself $100 to this fund, and may give even $500, if this matter is taken up cheerfully by others. No one shall be bound to pay the promised subscription until at least $10,000 has been secured in pledges. Who will answer this call? Send your pledge either to the Editor of the paper in which you see this notice, or to me, and your pledge will be announced from time to time so as to encourage others to do likewise. In my judgment this is the most encouraging opportunity to do good that now offers itself to our brotherhood. I hope that the amount I have indicated, as necessary to secure the pledges made, will be more than quadrupled in a very short time. Speak out, brethren, at once on this all-important subject. W. T. Moore.

The Centennial in Australia.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Dear Brethren—Your readers will doubtless be interested to learn that the proposed Centennial celebrations of the Australian Churches of Christ are now taking definite shape. The local interest is strong, and brethren far and wide are signifying their intention to be present. To many living in your land of big things, it may be news that Australia has a "far and wide," but I should like to point out that it is equal in area to the United States of America. Extreme west to extreme east is a journey of seven days. Its northern coast stretches into the tropics just ten degrees from the equator. Its southernmost point is within a few days' sail of the eternal snows of the Antarctic. Within this area is embraced a land of unlimited possibilities. Thousands of square miles of pasture lands supporting millions of the best wool-bearing sheep in the world—wheat lands that are already yielding their surplus of golden grain for the sustenance of the nations without—mountains of iron-stone waiting future generations—rocks and mines that have already given up untold wealth in gold, silver, copper, lead and coal. We can show you snowy solitudes, beautiful farm lands, vast plains scorched by the sun and thirsting for the population necessary to make immigration profitable, coastal scenes of surpassing beauty and cities that would do credit to any of the older countries, but the center and pick of the lot are to be found in and around Sydney, the city of our Centennial celebrations. Your visiting fleet has come and gone. Your "Jackies" have seen for themselves. Thousands of post cards have borne graphic testimony to the beauties of this land. Why not come and confirm the evidence for yourself?

A Reproduction of the "Sticker" which our Australian Brethren are Attaching to Their Stationery and Literature to Boom Their Centennial.

But we have higher reasons for inviting you. We want to see you face to face—to talk with you of our common cause—of our victories and our failures—of our common Lord and of the home beyond. We want you to help us to make known the fact that around this planet of ours runs an unbroken bond of Christian kinship.

Among our visitors we expect C. R. Scoville. We shall be interested to see how this champion of soul winners succeeds under the altered condition in Australia—for he comes to work and expects a rich harvest.

The unique occasion will, we hope, attract visitors from all parts and all continents be represented. The state conference to be held on and around April 9 next will be a particularly large one. Then follows the Australian Federal conference, commencing on April 14, in connection with which the celebration meetings will take place, culminating in a grand united communion service. Such are the plans we propose, under God's providence, carrying out. We look to you to assist in their successful accomplishment. If you are coming, please notify the conference secretary, A. E. Illingworth, Denison street, Woollakra, Sydney, as early as possible—otherwise it may not be practicable to arrange for your free accommodation during the conference. If you can not come, please send your greetings. We want particularly to hear from Australian members of the churches who have taken up their residence in your great land, and from those of your number who have at any time had fellowship with us in our work. It will do us good to know that they and you have not forgotten us on this great occasion.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Illinois.

J. N. Harker goes from Eureka College to take the new mission work in Montgomery, Ala. It is under the auspices of the Alabama State Society and the A. C. M. S., and has a splendid prospect before it.——Alva W. Taylor assisted in a meeting for the Mt. Zion church, near Eureka, Ill. Prof. Radford, who has preached for this church much of the time for the past thirty years, has just ordained their newly-elected elders. This is one of the few old country churches that remain vigorous. Though not large in numbers, they keep a live Bible school for their own and their neighbors' children, and have preaching each Lord's day morning.——The Volunteer Missionary Band of Eureka College now numbers nineteen. They are a splendid band of young people. They are visiting the neighboring churches on Sunday evenings and talking missions, using the slides furnished by the Foreign Society to illustrate their message. Their enthusiasm and the living example of their presence makes their work very effective.——W. F. Turner, of Joplin, Mo., has accepted a call to the Central Church, of Peoria. We welcome him to the state most cordially and predict for him a useful and successful pastorate with the vigorous church at Peoria, where such excellent men as G. B. Van Arsdall and Harry F. Burns were his predecessors. He has the inspiration and well wishes of these two men to help him in the work.——J. Harry Bullock, of Footville, Wis., is the new state superintendent of Bible school work, and has begun the publication of a live little journal to help the work. Wisconsin needs more vigorous young men like Brother Bullock to give of time and talent to missionary work. The field is great but the workers are few.——Elmore Sinclair, of Watseka, assisted Lewis Starbuck in a meeting at Pittwood, Ill.

Nebraska Secretary's Letter.

Four have been added at Verdon that have not been reported. A. L. Ogden is preaching there half time. This church has made a decided gain in its state offering this year. Such a healthy missionary growth presages a spiritual and material growth at home.

Bible School Evangelist Hall spent Lord's day, December 13, with the South Omaha church and school, where F. T. Ray ministers. He went to Murray on Monday. His direction will be westward after Christmas.

One added recently at Blair, D. M. Sayles, preacher. Brother Sayles is taking a medical course in Cotner Medical College.

Evon Forell and L. W. Ogle are now in a meeting at Holdrege. They have moved from the small church building they began in and are now in the court house. We hope this effort will result in a permanent organization in that thriving city of four thousand people.

State Evangelist Gregg is at Dorchester and Mitchell at Cook.

E. L. Kechley visited Ord on December 13 and H. M. Johnson supplied at Ulysses. The Ord brethren gave Brother Kechley a call to that work, which we hope he will accept. He has a call from an Iowa church also. Doubtless he will have decided this matter before this is read.

The secretary visited Murray on December 13 in the interest of the state offering and of the church. They have had no regular preaching since Brother Lucas left them, but are now looking toward the calling of a man either to locate or to supply for half time. This church has a good house, well appointed and located, as well as a parsonage.

The first half of our missionary year is nearing its close. The returns from the November offering have been fine, though some have reported offerings that have not yet been remitted. It is urged that all these be sent in immediately, or at least before the close of the month. If we can have all this in hand at the time of the January board meeting, it will help to determine the work of the next half year. Then there are a good many of our churches that have thus far not been heard from in this matter. Some have been engaged in meetings, but we need now to bring up this matter. We have engaged in a large undertaking in attempting to raise $5,000 ourselves this year, and nothing less than a full co-operation of all the missionary churches in the state will enable us to reach this amount. Nor will it be sufficient to merely take a basket offering. A perfunctory mention of the cause and its needs means a small offering. We believe that this work has made a record that entitles it to the hearty support of all preachers and churches. Remember that 700 were added to our weak churches last year by our workers, three new churches organized, as many Bible schools and three Christian Endeavor societies, besides the pastoral work done and the wounds healed; that the time put in amounted to the labor of one man for six and one-half years; that the work done was not in the easy and favorable fields, but in the distressed places, where work is difficult and additions come slowly; that all this cost our State a little over $3,000, including special living link offerings of $475. What church is there that would not think it money well expended to add 700 to its membership by the payment of $3,000? If we add the money received from the American Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the total cost would be less than $4,000. We are asking for about 35 cents per member of those in our active churches; less than that in fact. Have you given yours? If not, have you had the opportunity? Has the matter been presented in your church? If you have paid it, has it been sent in?

In District No. 8, where the brethren have suffered from crop failures as in no other part of the state, they have sent in almost the entire amount of their living link money, which means practically double the amount given last year for this work. This is in Southwest Nebraska, where we have only a few churches of strength, and none that are as able as in the central and eastern part. Such giving as this should stimulate those churches in the favored parts of the state to rally generously to this work. Just now their evangelist is doing work in an eastern county.

We appeal to those churches, Bible schools and Christian Endeavor societies that have made no offerings this year to do so at once. Send the money promptly to W. A. Baldwin, corresponding secretary, Bethany, Neb. Money from all departments should come to this office.

The brethren in the state will be rejoiced to know that the Lincoln First Church building and the one at Bethany are being pushed rapidly these days of good weather. Both of them will be fine workshops for the congregations occupying them. The Lincoln church meets in the auditorium, but will soon be in their own basement. Bro. H. H. Harmon is the preacher. Brother Pritchard still meets his large congregations in the chapel of the university.

The state board will probably meet in Lincoln on January 5. Possibly it may come a day or so later, but that date is the beginning of the Bible School institute, to be conducted at Cotner University by Marion Stevenson, of St. Louis, and will enable the members of the board to remain for the rest of the week at least. This will be a feast of Bible instruction and workers' methods. The superintendents and teachers of our schools should make plans to attend.

W. A. Baldwin.

Santa Barbara, Cal.

Our meeting of three weeks came to a close recently with 24 added—all confessions of Christ but four. I think as many more would have been willing to accept Christ and unite with the church if parents had not been opposed or indifferent. In twenty-five years' ministry I never saw before so many children and young people hindered by parents. It was indeed disheartening. The hearing was fine throughout the meeting. So was the spirit of co-operation on the part of the churches. Prof. Stout's singing charmed and helped all. He greatly endeared himself to the people of Santa Barbara. Our Teacher-Training class, taught by Prof. H. D. Williams, numbers about 65 enrolled.——Our Intermediate C. E. is planning to raise a fund to meet the expense of a mission among the 3,000 or 4,000 Spanish in this city. Such a work was started about a year ago and permitted to lapse for lack of support. It is greatly needed.——There is an effective organization here among Christian people to evangelize and cheer and help the sailors at this port.——Santa Maria, in this county, is about to call a minister to serve the church. Lompoc has a church building, some members, but no preacher.——Just about 50 new members added here since I came August 15.

Sumner T. Martin, minister.

Indianapolis Items.

Indianapolis has been moving along with the rest of the world. We have had two evidences of the growing spirit of fraternity which is reuniting Christendom. On Thanksgiving Day, Dr. Taylor, pastor of the First Baptist Church, preached the Thanksgiving sermon in the Central Christian Church on the invitation of Dr. A. B. Philputt, the pastor. Brother Philputt attended the joint congress in Chicago and acted immediately on his return.—A dozen of the leading denominations have united their laymen in a week of prayer for and by men. The movement inaugurated by prominent Episcopalians was taken up enthusiastically. Prominent laymen from various denominations spoke from night to night. Brother S. M. Cooper, of Cincinnati, spoke for us, and it is needless to say that none of us was in the least ashamed of "our man."——Brother W. H. Smith of the Fourth Church, together with his splendid workers, has started a mission at East Tenth and Rural street in a populous residence district not covered by the ministry of any of our churches. The prospects are very bright for this new cause.——After seven years of faithful and efficient service Brother Austin Hunter has resigned at the North Park Church. Brother Hunter is highly esteemed for his work's sake, and we hope to retain him at some work in the city. ——The Third Church will celebrate its fortieth anniversary January 3. We have departed from the usual plan for mid-week meetings and so far all are delighted with the innovation. Instead of the usual topics recommended by the Prayer-meeting Committee, we take the topics arranged by Josiah Strong for the American Institute for Social Service. The course is systematic, practical and thought provoking. After a few minutes spent in devotion, I usually give a brief lecture, which is followed by a free discussion, in which any who care may participate. Dr. Strong has written that we have the largest class in the United States, and we are trying to make it the best. Every preacher ought to have these studies for his own edification, even if he does not conduct a class.——Dr. Royal J. Dye, of Bolenge, West Africa, was in our city a few days and was kept as busy as W. J. Bryan, making addresses to every class of audiences. As one of our brethren termed him, "he is the greatest live wire for missions and of missionary passion we have among us." It seems he should be divided, one half "going back to Africa" and the other half should remain in America and be kept busy converting half-baked Christians to the gospel of missions. We can hardly spare him and Africa needs him.——Butler College has more men than women in its student body this year. Her football team finished the season without a defeat and the institution has more friends than ever. President T. C. Howe is deservedly popular with all who are in any way connected with the interests of the institution.——Brother Clay Trusty, the evangelistic pastor of the Seventh Church, has been in a series of meetings and about one hundred have responded to his earnest appeals.——Brother Winders is not entirely weaned from Missouri, and was recently again in that state holding a short evangelistic meeting. He is very much beloved in Irvington, where he is "just the man" for our college church.

H. G. Hill, pastor Third Church.

Puyallup's Greatest Meeting.

We recently closed one of the most successful meetings ever held in Puyallup, and perhaps on the west coast. The meeting ran five weeks, and resulted in 230 being added, 138 baptisms, 66 from other religious bodies and 23 by statement.

The evangelists who led in this meeting were David Eugene Olson, C. C. Curtis and Mrs. Nellie Callison, all of Eugene, Ore. Brother Olson is a power for good and is not ashamed to speak the truth in its purity and simplicity. Large congregations listened with rapt attention through the entire five weeks. Before the meeting was one week old, the house was too small for the crowds. A large tent was secured and added as an annex to the building, which gave room for about 1,200 and still there was not room enough.

The Gospel was not only given in work from the pulpit, but in song by Sister Callison's sweet and inspiring solos. Brother Curtis is a splendid song leader and music director. He led a chorus of 80 voices, including the children's chorus and an orchestra of ten pieces.

These brethren place great emphasis on Bible school work. There was an increase of from 135 to 256 in Bible school while they were here. All departments of the work have taken on great activity. Most of the young people who came in have also enlisted in the Endeavor work. Our meeting of the Endeavor, which I must mention, was called "Telegram Service." Eighty young people took hold, most of whom had just become Christians; fifty offered prayer.

A "Young ladies' missionary circle" was organized by Sister Callison, with 33 charter members. Thirty of our young people volunteered to consecrate their lives to the ministry. Some are already gone to "Eugene Bible University," Eugene, Ore., to prepare for the work.

Brother Olson established a Swedish mission. A number of Scandinavians have taken the stand for primitive Christianity. This will be led by Brother Holsten, a Swedish member who lives here, who came into the church from the Baptists during the meeting.

There is a bright future for the Church of Christ in Puyallup. There are now almost 400 members, and with Brother J. T. Eshelman as our minister and leader, we look for a greater work than ever before. Plans are already on foot to enlarge the church building. On Monday evening a reception was given the new members. At this time Brother Olson raised $1,000 toward the building. All the expenses of the meeting were met with free-will offerings.

Puyallup is a town of six or seven thousand people, located in a rich fertile valley between Tacoma and Seattle. The climate is mild and pleasant most of the time.

New Zealand Letter.

The Dominion of New Zealand is not only leading the world in her land laws, old-age pensions and other meritorious legislative experiments, but is also found in the advance column in temperance reform. The triennial vote on no license was taken this month (Nov. 17), and the result has really overwhelmed the liquor party. The vote is taken by electorates, corresponding in some measure to the county unit; but the electorate has more or less flexible boundaries. The issues on which the vote is taken are three in number—continuance of licenses, reduction and no license. The issues are so arranged that each voter votes on any two of the issues. "Striking out the top line," therefore, counts for reduction and no license. A bare majority of the valid votes cast counts for reduction, and a three-fifths counts for no license. The no license people have a very taking song called "Strike Out the Top Line," sung to a popular tune, and it is usually sung with great enthusiasm at the close of the meetings. The liquor party have meetings, but they lack the fervor and music of the other side.

Before the present vote was taken there were six dry electorates. The vote of Nov. 17 shows that the six have reaffirmed no license, and nine new electorates have been added to the dry column. In three of the large centers (Dunedin, Auckland and Wellington) the public houses have been swept out of the suburbs and driven into the center of these cities. The public house in New Zealand ostensibly exists as a hotel, but in the residential areas it is little better than a grog-shop. The publicans read the handwriting on the wall, and accept the growing no license vote as nothing less than a notice to quit.

The no license vote has steadily grown from 1893, when it was 48,993, to 198,768 in 1905. The vote recently taken will approximately reach 230,000. If a bare majority carried, as in the United States, New Zealand could easily have total prohibition all over the dominion. The entire population of New Zealand is not much above 900,000. The women vote on all questions, and this accounts for the rapid growth of the no license movement. Many electorates fall but a few votes short of the necessary three-fifths, and it is confidently believed that at the next triennial, half, at least, of New Zealand will be dry.

Both parties fought hard, and the organization on both sides was well-nigh perfect. No detail was overlooked. The no license party conducted for several months educational meetings in the great halls and theaters. In recent weeks the interest has been intense. The students of this city (Dunedin) arranged a great demonstration, addressed by representatives of the student body. This was a master move, and was quite discomfiting to the liquor side. The liquor people had a very competent organizer and leader. He was formerly a Presbyterian minister, and has had a checkered career. He is discredited by the church, but still advertises himself as the "Rev. Wm. Thompson." Last year he visited the state of Maine, and found the conditions in Portland, to use his own word, "appalling," The figures he brought back were used to show how prohibition failed in Maine, and were constantly in evidence as a dreadful warning to the voters of New Zealand.

The writer was urged, as one who knew something of American conditions, to bear testimony to the effect of prohibition and no license in the United States. The Alhambra Theater was crowded the first night, and hundreds were turned away on the second night, when your scribe again spoke. The fact that Maine has had prohibition for over fifty years, and that recently the Republican convention refused to endorse the re-submission scheme were telling points which easily convinced the audiences that the people of Maine believe that prohibition is worth while.

Brother W. J. Hastie, our minister in this city, had a one-night debate with the liquor advocate. Another debate, in one of the halls, really ended in a small-sized riot. The feeling had become so tense that neither side could get a hearing. On the voting day the public houses and shops close at 1 p. m. The day was favorable, and it was interesting to watch the husband and wife go into the booth to vote, as well as groups of ladies, and on one occasion it was a young couple, each carrying a baby.

There was the best of good feeling by all parties. At night the crowds lingered on the streets until nearly midnight, watching the returns. The interest plainly centered in the no license vote, although the people were selecting a new parliament. This, however, was clearly a subsidiary interest.

New Zealand is distinctly the leading country in temperance reform in this part of the world, and offers, with its homogeneous population, an inviting field in which to test state-wide prohibition. That Dominion prohibition will soon be the issue no one can doubt.

Several auxiliaries of the C. W. B. M. have been organized since my arrival in the Dominion; and I have been able to deliver special addresses in several places, not only in our own, but in the churches of other religious bodies. I hope to be in the United States again early in March, 1909.

Akron, Ohio.

Everybody is happy in Akron as the Christmas season approaches. The First Church rejoices over the good meeting held by Brother Darsie for Walter Mansel in Columbus, where about fifty were added to the church in two weeks. The First church is planning for a great meeting under the leadership of Violett and Charlton early in January. The Broad Street Church is going forward in every line under the leadership of Loyd H. Miller. There are frequent additions to the church. They have about sixty in their training class. The Wabash Avenue Church has just closed a successful meeting led by Mitchell and Bilby. Nearly seventy were added. The church is to be left pastorless, however, with the close of the year, Brother Stahl being called to the church at Steubenville. We regret very much to have him leave us, but his work has been quite successful here and he goes to a larger field of usefulness. The work at South Akron, where the writer ministers, is in its most hopeful condition. We closed a three weeks' meeting November 22 with 46 added to the church, the whole cause strengthened and brought into the most favorable standing in the community. Mrs. Maud Miley, of Shreve, O., was our efficient leader of song and soloist. Her work as a personal worker is by no means the least of her efficiency. The work done by the members themselves is worthy of special mention. They were faithful during the month of October while we were preparing for the meeting. They took a systematic course in "personal work" during that time, and when the meeting began they were faithful to do what they had learned. Our Bible school was greatly helped, especially our men's class. The school has grown from a small school of about 150 to nearly 400, and yet we feel that our work is practically but begun. I am engaged for a meeting with the mission church at Orrville, O., in January. Brother Wm. Leigh, one of our men, is doing most efficient work as a singing evangelist, having just closed a successful meeting at Galesburg, Ill., with J. A. Barnett. He went from there to assist E. B. Barnes at Grand Rapids, Mich. Brother Leigh is worthy the confidence and esteem of our brethren and as a soloist has few equals among our singers. A Merry Christmas to all THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers.

Georgia.

I am doing some work for the Northeast district boom. During the month of November I visited Antioch, Jefferson, Erastus, Harmony, Franklin, Union Ground, Bethany, Lamar, Maysville, Unity, Corinth, Loganville, Bethel and Conyers churches. Found them ready to undertake larger things for the Master. R. A. Hovious will remain in the Franklin field. W. A. Chastain, of Athens, will preach at Monroe (half time), Mt. Vernon and Jefferson. This means much for this important field. Arrangements are about completed to locate one of our best preachers in the Corinth field. This field is composed of Corinth, Loganville, Bethel and Conyers churches and is one of the best fields in the state outside of the cities. We expect every church in the district to have preaching. One more preacher is needed. Write J. H. Wood, Winder. The writer begins a few days' meeting at Baldwin first Sunday in December. E. L. Shelnutt.

Acworth.

North Carolina.

I closed my labors with the church at Winston-Salem on the last of November, having been with the church there three years and three months. They have some noble workers and liberal givers. I found a church of about 90 members, when I left they numbered 194. In that time there was a gain of 110, a net gain of 103.

The Bible school grew from 50 to 170 enrolled during last year, or 203 including the cradle roll. The church has a debt on the building of nearly one thousand dollars, which they paid the first year. The house has been much improved with new furnace, pews, carpet and piano, also new roof on the Bible school room. The amount raised and expended in three years was about $6,500. A special offering on the first Lord's day of the month was devoted to missions and benevolence. W. B. Hendershot, of Martinsville, Va., conducted the last meeting. There were 22 additions when I left, and 4 others had made confession. Some of them were not permitted to be baptized. Of these additions 9 were baptisms.

Brother Hendershot is minister at Martinsville, Va., with part of his time given to evangelizing. He is a young man. I need hardly say he is without doubt a coming evangelist. He only lacks opportunity for large meetings. He is also a good leader in song. Churches needing an evangelist write him.

I have had invitations to some fields. I want to find the one where I think I can do most good. I want a church where some one will be at work every day and every night in the week, and its doors are open every day. Mail will reach me addressed to Winston-Salem, N. C.

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

District of Columbia.

Washington, Dec. 18.—The Ministerial Association of the District of Columbia met December 14 in Vermont Avenue Church, President Dew in the chair. Present: Brothers Dew, Miller, Stuart, Oram, Thompson, J. A. Hopkins, Powell, Lutz, Middlekoph and Smith. Added since last report: Vermont Avenue, three by conversion and baptism; Tenth Street, two by conversion and baptism; H Street, one by conversion and baptism; Whitney Avenue, one by statement and four by conversion and baptism. Nineteen were added in the Lutz meeting which closed on December 13; Thirty-fourth Street, one by conversion and baptism.—Walter F. Smith, secretary.

Illinois.

Mulkeytown, Dec. 17.—Evangelist C. M. Smithson is assisting Thomas E. Israel in a meeting here.

Armington, Dec. 17.—We baptized a Methodist lady 84 years old, and a man of middle age, this week.—John C. Lappin, minister.

Barry, Dec. 21.—We have just closed a splendid meeting here wtih 23 additions and the church much revived and strengthened every way. One of our sisters died recently leaving to the church a very fine residence for a parsonage, and also a fund for the church.—W. H. Kern.

Camp Point, Dec. 18.—The writer recently closed a meeting at Kewanee, with W. A. Green. Ten names were added to the church roll, eight of whom were by baptism. Brother Green is greatly beloved there and deservedly so. He has wrought well and has been faithful. He will hold a meeting for Camp Point church beginning January 3, 1909. Camp Point and Pleasant View have become living linkers in Illinois missions. Bushnell is the point adopted. This is a good long step in the right direction. We rejoice.—H. J. Reynolds.

Indiana.

Summitville, Dec. 20.—We are on the victory side. A public reception in the church parlors Thursday evening to the 43 new additions. Last Lord's day was the banner day for our Sunday-school. We are preparing an elaborate Christmas entertainment under the efficient leadership of Miles F. Wood, the superintendent. The writer has been engaged every spare hour in evangelistic work; at present we are with Allenbaugh at Forest Chapel. Many have come to Christ. Great meetings at Anderson, East Lynne, Arrow Avenue, Concordia, Summitville and Forest Chapel. The old story of the cross, the Book and its theme, are the great influences that still lead men to the light.—George W. Winfrey, pastor-evangelist.

Kentucky.

Sturgis, Dec. 18.—There is a great meeting in progress at the Christian Church. Evangelist S. M. Bernard, of Madisonville, is preaching the old Jerusalem gospel in the most convincing manner, and men and women are thinking as never before. Twenty-two have been added to the congregation by letter and primary obedience and more will follow. Hundreds are turning out to hear this great man preach the gospel, and from all parts of the country.

Kansas.

Abilene, Dec. 7.—One confession yesterday morning. We begin a meeting January 1.—Clifford A. Cole.

Pleasanton, Dec. 10.—We held our own meeting this fall, with the home forces. The meeting closed Lord's day evening, resulting in fourteen added—8 by confession and baptism.—O. A. Ishmael.

Concordia, Dec. 10.—Closed our meeting here last evening with 12 added—7 by statement or letter, and 5 from other religious organizations, one of whom had been immersed. The minister, Harry G. Hedden, is a splendid co-worker and has an influence for good with all. Louis Epler, of Bethany, Neb., led the song service and did very efficient service.—O. L. Adams, Living Link Evangelist.

Elk City, Dec. 17.—I preached for the brethren at Cherokee, Kan., Dec. 13, morning and evening. There were two confessions, and one by letter at the morning service. I will visit them again in two weeks.—O. L. Sumner, minister.

Havensville, Dec. 16.—Elder J. P. Haner, of Moran, Kan., closed a three weeks' meeting here Monday night. The good accomplished is not measured by the 12 additions to the church. The whole community was stirred and aroused by Brother Haner's strong, helpful sermons. The meeting was largely attended by the members of other churches, and so much so that the meeting almost took on the dimensions of a union meeting. If you need a rousing meeting call Brother Haner.—F. H. Bentley.

Massachusetts.

Haverhill, December 8.—W. B. Blakemore, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, has just closed a two-weeks' meeting with the Church of Christ here. Unfortunately the time set for the meeting proved to be an improper one, for it was then that the hottest part of the temperance fight was being waged between the "license" and "no license" forces, and there was much to draw from the meeting. The seeds of the simple gospel were surely sown, and we trust for the gathering of the harvest in the future. The immediate results of the meeting were three additions—two by baptism and one by letter from the Methodists. The two by baptism were men, heads of families. This means much to our church, the only one of our people in this city of 40,000. Our growth here is slow, but step by step we are gaining ground and the future looks brighter.—W. R. Mains, minister.

Michigan.

Fremont, Dec. 11.—During the past month there have been four additions—two by confession and two from another religious body. Eight have been added to the Senior Endeavor, and a Junior Endeavor Society organized with 20 members.—A. R. Adams, pastor.

Benton Harbor, Dec. 18.—Three confessions since coming here a few weeks ago. We have some splendid people in the church, loyal and true.—T. W. Bellingham, minister.

Missouri.

St. Joseph, Dec. 10.—We have just closed a short meeting with home forces at Mitchell Park Christian Church, resulting in 18 additions.—C. A. Lowe, pastor.

Newton, Dec. 8.—We commenced our meeting on Saturday night. Large congregations with two additions last night.—Benjamin Matchett.

Boonville, Dec. 14.—Meeting closed here last night with 16 additions to this church—seven by letter and statement and nine confessions. The meeting was attended by large audiences in spite of some very bad weather. We were assisted by Prof. V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka, Kan., whose work was highly satisfactory.—J. B. Weldon.

Jasper, Dec. 14.—Just closed a three and one-half weeks' meeting, with E. H. Williamson and wife at the helm. The result was 23 added—12 baptisms and 11 otherwise. Brother Williamson and his wife are laborers worthy of their hire.—John A. Allen, pastor.

Ash Grove, Dec. 11.—I held a 15-days' meeting here with 18 added—nine confessions. My work with this church is starting out very hopefully. I am now in a meeting at Fair Play, with one confession to date.—J. H. Jnoes.

Joplin, Dec. 18.—On November 15 Thomas L. Cooksey, of Greenfield, Ind., assisted in the song service by J. Ross Miller, of Gas City, Ind., began a meeting with the Central Church. The congregation, under the leadership of its pastor, L. L. Combs, had for weeks been busy in a campaign of preparation, and a prayer-meeting was held every evening of the week preceding the commencement of the meeting. Dr. Cooksey is one of God's noblemen, a princely soldier of the cross. Brother Miller, a splendid young disciple, is associated with Brother Cooksey, and he captivated us all by his many virtues. His solos were tender and sweet, and he has few equals as a chorus director. The Central Christian Church, although only seventeen months old, now has a membership of over 400 as a result of this meeting; we go forth to greater and grander things in the name of our Master, with an abiding confidence that he will give us the blessings we shall deserve.—Horace Merritt.

Nebraska.

Peru, Dec. 14.—Knowles and Ridenour are doing a grand work here. Fifty-five added in 15 days. Scores and scores come an hour early but are turned away for lack of room. I have never had a better evangelistic team with me in my fifteen years' ministry. We continue three days.—L. A. Hussong.

Peru, Dec. 9.—We are in a great meeting here in the Peru mission church. Harry G. Knowles and Carol M. Ridenour are the evangelists leading us. Thirty-five have been added in eleven days. We continue with intense, favorable and undiminishing interest. The house is only large enough to accommodate about half of those who desire to attend. The town and state normal school are both deeply stirred. Knowles and Ridenour are true to the gospel and strong in their personality.—L. A. Hussong.

Ohio.

Geneva, Dec. 14.—I am spending a few days with the Geneva church. I find that F. M. Field has been an extraordinary pastor here. He is very successful in a very difficult field. We had 12 additions yesterday.—M. J. Grable.

Lyons, Dec. 14.—The meeting at Winameg closed last evening with nine baptisms, one by letter and one by statement. There was the greatest sectarian spirit displayed I have ever met in my work in the ministry. I expect to begin a meeting at Lyons, O., January 1, with A. L. Haley, of Butler, Ind., in charge of the song service.—A. C. Osborn, pastor.

Oklahoma.

Stillwater, Dec. 15.—The Church of Christ closed a very successful meeting recently. Virtes Williams has been the pastor here for the past eleven years, with the exception of one year. The meeting continued about fifteen days with the following results: Thirty-one by confession and baptism, five from other religious bodies, 13 by letter or statement. The church is in much better condition than is usually the case after one of the regular evangelists has visited the town. No one has "joined the preacher," as the phrase is sometimes heard. The various departments of the church are in good working order. The Bible school especially is a very effective institution. The total membership of the church is now about 475. This is due to the efforts of the well-beloved pastor.—C. L. Kezer.

Woodward, Dec. 9.—Ten added to the church here since last report—six by primary obedience and four by letter and statement, nearly all of whom were young men and women.

Pryor Creek, Dec. 9.—I closed a two-weeks' meeting with the brethren of the Old Union Church, Poseyville, Ind., a few nights ago, with seven additions—five by primary obedience. My friends may address me at Chelsea, Okla., until further notice.—Morton H. Wood, evangelist.

Sapulpa, Dec. 16.—This has been a happy and prosperous year for the church here. One hundred and eighteen new members have been received in eighteen months, and the Bible school doubled in that time. The church has also bought a new lot and will put up a modern church within a year, the present building being outgrown. This is one of the good working churches of the new state.—R. W. Tener.

Pennsylvania.

New Castle, Dec. 7.—The Third Christian Church has just closed a four-weeks' meeting with William A. Ward, evangelist, T. J. Due being leader of song the first two weeks. There were 33 added—25 by baptism. Since my coming here January 1, as minister, we have had 48 added.—J. F. Baxter.

Myersdale, Dec. 4.—I closed a meeting with the Second Church of Johnstown, Pa., last night, with 29 additions—23 by baptism. W. E. Reeves is the efficient pastor. It was a spirited, enthusiastic and spiritual meeting throughout. Brother Reeves filled my pulpit in my absence.—Charles W. Mahin.

Texas.

Dallas, Dec. 15.—Cephas Shelburne reports five additions to the East Dallas church on Sunday, December 13, making 14 since his last report, and 50 added to the church since his work began at Dallas.

Dallas, Dec. 15.—We had four additions last Sunday at the Central Church. I have been here seven Sundays as pastor, with 30 additions. Our audiences are fine, filling the church at the morning hour. We became a living link in state missions; also hope to do likewise in other fields. We have organized a city mission board and will call a city evangelist. The people are indeed a great people. M. M. Davis, who labored for the church for 18 years, gave his life for the work, or the greater part of it. A great work has been done in the past and we hope for a future that will be even greater. I am delighted with Texas.—J. O. Shelburne.

Abilene, Dec. 14.—One addition to South Side Christian Church by statement Sunday.—J. H. Shepard.

Utah.

Salt Lake City, Dec. 6.—Two by letter Sunday, the pastor, Dr. Albert Buxton, preaching.

Virginia.

Enon, Dec. 10.—Just closed a short meeting at Elpis Church with three additions—two by statement and one from another religious body. This church is sadly in need of a preacher.—W. L. Burner, minister.

West Virginia.

Hinton, Dec. 4.—We have just closed a very successful meeting here, with 15 accessions, the meeting having lasted ten days. There were eight by baptism, one from the Methodists, one from the Presbyterians and five restored. Ritchie Ware, of Beckly, W. Va., did the preaching. The church has been greatly helped in every way, and we regard this as one of the best meetings we have ever had.—F. H. Scott, minister.

Wisconsin.

Monroe, Dec. 11.—Evangelist H. Gordon Bennett just closed a very successful meeting with the church at La Harpe, Ill., with 78 added; several men, among them three drunkards. This church

RELIABILITY.

What It Means to Cereal Food Users.

A certain amount of laxity in the purchase of food stuffs generally is perhaps permissible; but, when it comes to a question of Sanitary Foods and Specialties for sufferers from certain ailments, the greatest care should be exercised in their selection. The importance of diet in both health and disease is becoming more and more recognized by both laymen and physicians.

As manufacturers of unquestioned reliability and sterling integrity in all their dealings, this paper is glad to recommend Farwell and Rhines, of Watertown, N. Y. For the past thirty years of their existence they have been manufacturing cereal foods for sufferers from Acid Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Intestinal and Kidney and Liver troubles. Their most widely known and most valuable products are "Cresco Flour" and "Special Dietetic Food." These are used in making bread, biscuit, gems, griddle cakes, etc. Of equal fame and usefulness are their "Cresco Grits" and "Barclay Crystals"—delicious, wholesome breakfast and dessert cereals.

While the various Farwell and Rhines products, for the past three decades, have been used by physicians and the public both here and abroad, there are, of course, many who are unacquainted with them. The booklets and literature of this firm tell just what these foods are and how to use them; still, it is the practical test that "proves the pudding." For this reason the manufacturers announce that they will send liberal samples to persons who feel the need of such goods. A request by mail will be promptly attended to.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

A NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION.

Topic Jan. 6, 1909. Acts 27:21-26; Rom. 12:1-3.

It is a great thing to be able to say, with Paul, "Be of good cheer; for I believe God that it shall be even as it was told me."

To believe God—not merely to believe there is a God somewhere—but to believe that God is and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him; to be assured of his faithfulness; to hold fast the promises with the confident expectation of their fulfillment; to have the faith that, come what will or fail what may, of earthly things, no promise of his shall fail us in the end, is to know the secret of good cheer. To thus believe God is to triumph in the midst of the years, no matter how they seem to mock at all our plans. Who really and truly believes God is somehow in league with the Infinite. The only failure in this world that is fatal and irretrievable is a failure to believe God to the staying of our souls. To stay our soul upon God is better than any coat of mail that man ever made. Thus all the faithful of all the ages have leaned upon the everlasting arms, and been comforted. So Paul and Silas trusted in God and sang songs in the night time, with their feet thrust fast in the stocks. And God delivered them. Thus Paul believed God in the midst of the shipwreck, as they were exceedingly tossed with the tempest, when neither sun nor stars appeared for many days and all hope that they should be saved was taken away. Humanly speaking, they were lost. It was in the midst of this distress that the angel of God "whose I am, and whom I serve," stood by him, saying, "Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar; and lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee." It is a great thing to believe in God and be in good company.

It is a great thing to be in the companionship of a man, who, like Paul, had a work to do and was immovable till his task was done. It was this regal faith in God that enabled Paul to say, "Whose I am and whom I serve," and this is really the kingly thing in life. To be the servant of God, as Moses was, is to share in the immortality of the ages that is his. The mountain-top men are the men who believe in this humble and yet heroic way. Moses says of himself that he was a man of stammering tongue, and the enemies of Paul said of him that he was in bodily presence weak and contemptible; yet these two men have influenced the world's history beyond any others who ever lived in our world. Thus Abraham also believed God, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness, and he was called the friend of God.

So let us resolve that we will be of good cheer. Let us cast fear to the winds, remembering that he holdeth these in the hollow of his hand. O, it is a beautiful thing to get this sort of grip on God! This kind of faith will not only save us individually, but those that company with us. It does not follow that we shall have all smooth sailing. Paul was in manifold perils, by land and by sea; but out of them all the Lord delivered them. But he lost his life at last, you say? Yes. But it was a glorious triumph. There is a thrilling note of victory in the shout of the great apostle as he was ready to be offered up: "I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, my righteous judge, shall give me in that day; and not unto me only, but unto all them that love his appearing." So let us resolve to believe God unto victory. So let us do our work with hopeful optimism. The optimist has the angels on his side.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

DePew's Notes.

W. C. Chapman, County Teacher Training Superintendent of Iroquois County, Ill, reports only one organized church in the county, the one at Milford, without a Training Class. Other superintendents could make as good a report.

Spent Sunday, Dec. 13, in Liberty, and spoke at the graduating exercises of a class of six taught by Supt. Floyd Mercer. It was a most delightful day indeed, as they know how to do things in Liberty. A new class of 50 has already been organized, and an advanced class of six. Secured applications for Certificates of Recognition from the Loyal Sons class of 25, Floyd Mercer, teacher, and the young ladies' class of 25, Guy Tourney, teacher. This makes 25 classes in Illinois that have recently applied for the certificates from George W. Miller at Paris. Two other adult classes in Liberty will soon be organized on the International plan and apply for certificates.

The Delta Alpha Class, Miss Marie Finney, teacher, Jacksonville, Ill., has this new charter. This makes 7 certificates in this school, with 425 enrolled in the seven classes.

A letter from secretary Ranshaw says 84 schools have already sent offerings for Children's Day for Home Missions, from Illinois, as against 63 last year. I have repor's from twelve others that have the offerings ready to send in, so we are in good shape there this year. Kentucky has 136 reported, Kansas 62, Ohio 53, and Indiana 41. So far from them all the receipts are about $2,000 ahead of the corresponding period last year.

With best wishes for a pleasant holiday season, I am, yours in the work,

Clarence L. DePew.

The Dungan Cadets.

My class of young men, from eighteen to twenty-five years of age, call themselves "The Dungan Cadets." They have a captain, two lieutenants, an orderly sergeant and two corporals. The captain is the presiding officer, the orderly sergeant is secretary, and the corporals act as buyers of refreshments and have other duties when we have open meetings. We also have a chairman and secretary of a helping hand club, by which we try to assist those out of work to get places of employment.

The Dungan Cadets.

I love the boys and am one of them, and they form about the largest class of our school in the Third Church. They give more money, as a usual thing, than any other class in the school.

I am very much interested in young men and find it a delightful work, but not an easy one by any means to keep them in line. Most of them are clerks, bookkeepers, stenographers and students.

Indianapolis, Ind. J. M. Dungan.

Twenty-six Young Men in Two Days.

The fact that the young men's organized class of 26 members at Clark, Mo., was gotten up and organized within two days, should be an inspiration to workers everywhere. S. P. Hulen, the superintendent of the school, thus tells the story of how it was done:

"It was about the easiest thing I have ever undertaken in Bible school work. I simply called two or three of the leaders into my office and asked them how they would like to go into a young men's Bible class, have their own officers and run their own affairs. They readily agreed to see other young men not in any Bble school. So I prepared the charter membership roll and they did the rest. When we met at the church the following night they had 26 names on their list, and most of them were present. After explaining the matter fully I turned the meeting over to them and they formed their organization. We have now about 20 good working members and the balance are not so good, but we hope to get them all into line.

"Eight of these splendid young men have become Christians since the organization of the class, and are now good workers in the church. The dance hall is closed up, and our young people are thinking about better things. This impresses me with the fact that we can not expect a blessing unless we try to do things."

If at Clark the class organization can reach 26 young men, break up a dance hall, make 20 of them good workers in the school, convert eight of them to Christ, all in a few months, surely something worth while can be done at other places, if, as Brother Hulen puts it, "we try to do things." The fact that other methods of reaching the young men have failed is no reason for refusing to try this method, which has succeeded in more than a thousand classes.

A White Field to be Harvested.

"We are glad to state that our Bible school attendance this morning was the highest in the history of the church, and from the present prospects we will go still higher. The harvest is ripe, and we have a great field to work in."

This note has just come from Enoch M. Gathright, secretary of the Whitney Avenue Bible school of Washington, D. C. It was our pleasure to visit this church during the Maryland convention, last September. The church is situated a few blocks from the National Soldiers' Home, in a fine neighborhood which is growing rapidly. In a short time we shall have one of our great churches in that community. The Bible school prepares the field, sows the seed, and reaps the harvest. It pays a hundred fold for all the labor bestowed upon it, and yet some good preachers think they ought to give more time to anything else than the Bible school. And that is where they are sadly mistaken.

Union Teacher Training Rally.

A union meeting of the eighteen training classes of Greater Kansas City was held under the direction of the Bible School Union of Greater Kansas City on Tuesday evening, November 24, 1908.

Prior to the 8 o'clock meeting, a number of the teachers of the training classes, and other Bible school workers, met Rev. J. M. Kersey, of Parsons, Kan., in an informal luncheon, served by the King's Daughters of the First Christian Church.

The Adult Bible class of the South Prospect Bible school furnished orchestra music for the evening.

Brother Kersey is teacher of the largest training class in the world, and great interest was shown in his work and his manner of teaching by the splendid audience that greeted him in the evening meeting.

He gave a most interesting address on the teacher training work, the Open Book, and demonstrated his manner of teaching his great class by drilling the union meeting for several minutes. He said: "Don't open the class for questions; don't lecture; it wastes time. Drill the class by repetition." He asked for responses in sections, as he does in his large home class, requesting that every one in the section respond as one voice.

Every one was delighted with Brother Kersey and his address, and his practical demonstrations of teaching.

The meeting was an evidence of the keen, wide-awake interest taken all over the city in this work of teacher training in this great crusade for the "Open Book."

Bible School Union of Kansas City.

Nine Hundred Against Three Hundred.

Three hundred members of the church at Alexandria, Indiana, are in a Bible school contest with the nine hundred members of the church at Elwood, Indiana. We wonder which will win. W. Grant Smith writes: "We have run the seventh Sunday. Contest to last thirteen weeks. This gives us the victory. They are waking up and doing fine, but Alexandria is hard to beat."

Eighteen months ago Alexandria had a Bible school of eighty members. Now they are a Centennial Bible school, the whole church and as many more are in the Bible school. A church like that is indeed "hard to beat." Can you beat it? Are you trying?

No Saloons Now in Lynchburg, Va.

"The city of Lynchburg, with a population of 35,000, voted out the saloons yesterday. Many of our people who were active in the strenuous campaign must have rested up yesterday, as our attendance and offering were smaller than usual."

This note came from the pastor of the church, F. F. Bullard. In good old pioneer days men went to church sometimes with their rifles, because of lurking enemies. The worship of God was frequently interrupted and suspended while the men rushed out to fight for their homes and loved ones. Who will say that they were not serving God as acceptably in defending their homes as in singing psalms? Happy is the preacher whose flock wearies itself in a victorious fight against the saloon. They were entitled to a rest at home, even on the Lord's day.

A Great Bible School at King City.

The writer spent Sunday, Nov. 1, at King City, Gentry Co., Mo., in a rally for "Larger Things" for that school and church. Often when we advocate the present-day features of Bible school work the answer comes, "these things can not be done in the country and village school." Now, King City is a village of about one thousand people. They set their mark at 200 in the Bible school for last Sunday, and when the reports were made they had present that morning 224. The membership of the church is about 175 or 200. The church house is not a very large one, and will soon have to be rebuilt or enlarged in order to accommodate the Bible school. Six Adult Bible classes authorized me to send them application blanks for organization under the International Standard, and I expect to send recognition certificates to all of these in a few days. J. M. Asbell is the hustling minister of the King City church, and T. J. Hasty is the superintendent of the Bible school. If we had such a man at the head of every one of our Bible schools in Missouri, teacher training and all other advanced movements could soon be unanimous.

King City is located in the midst of a splendid farming country, and is one of the very best small towns in Missouri or any other state. The rally of last Sunday was the beginning of a protracted meeting which will be led by the minister, and F. H. DeVol, of Union Star, another excellent town church near by. Brother Butler, the sightless sweet singer, conducts the music. I fully expect a large ingathering during this meeting, which began under such favorable auspices.

If the reader would like to know how to put into operation the aggressive features of Bible school work in a village church, let him write to T. J. Hasty, King City, Mo. They have one of the best teacher training classes in the state, and in every particular are doing their work on high grade scientific principles.

Forty Baptized from one Home Department.

And it is out in the country, too. One of the largest Home Departments in the brotherhood belongs to the Bible school of Bell Ridge Church, Edgar County, Ill. Mrs. O'Hair gathered this department with the help of faithful workers who traveled over thirteen rural routes. Would you have persevered? Now she writes us that forty of her Home Department members have been baptized. Was it not worth while?

A Religious Census.

Twenty-five churches of Washington, Pa., are in a union revival meeting led by Henry Ostrom. A preliminary canvass of the whole city was one of the works of preparation, and Class 17 of the First Christian Church had a helpful share in that work. The class is also helpful in all departments of the work of the church. E. A. Cole is the teacher of this great class.

State Conferences on Adult Bible Class Work.

W. C. Pearce, international secretary of adult Bible class work, has arranged a series of state conferences. The purpose is explained in a letter to the editor, which we produce below.

Every adult Bible class worker in reach of these conferences should plan to attend. It will be a great blessing to the work if every adult class would make up a purse and send their teacher. How many will do this?

If you are planning to attend one of these conferences, or if you are planning to send any one from your school or your class, please note the closing paragraph of the letter from Secretary Pearce.

Chicago, December 18, 1908.

My Dear Brother—The rapid growth in the number of organized Bible classes presents to Sunday-school workers many new problems which demand the combined wisdom of all that the movement may be wisely guided. To this end a series of conferences has been arranged for the winter, a list of which you will please find enclosed. Each conference is held under the auspices of the State or Provincial Association where it is held, and in co-operation with the International Association. We have endeavored to locate them so that at least a large part of the field would be covered. I write now to ask your co-operation in making them as successful as possible. May I suggest the following ways in which your help will be specially appreciated?

1. By planning to personally attend as many of these conferences as your other responsibilities will permit.

2. By securing the presence of as many denominational officers at one or more of these conferences as possible. I am thinking specially of your field workers, state superintendents, editors and publishers, and others who are specially responsible for the guidance of this department of work in your denomination.

3. By giving as large publicity to these conferences in your publications as the space at your disposal will permit. I would specially appreciate having you announce them in those publications which go to your adult classes.

I should be very glad to hear from you and if you know any of your leaders who will be able to attend any of these conferences please send me their names and addresses, and the conference they will attend. Thanking you in advance for your co-operation and with best wishes for the holiday season, I am yours most sincerely,

W. C. Pearce,
Adult Department Superintendent.

Concerning Heresy Trials.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Indianapolis, Dec. 5, 1908.

Dear Brother Garrison:—The note on "heresy trials" in "Budget" of The Christian-Evangelist this week affords occasion to say a few things that I feel ought to be said.

1. I have the same feeling of aversion to "heresy trials" as is general among us, but am convinced that this usurpation of the power of an ecclesiastical court by a newspaper will not cease until there is a recognized way of settling disputes over doctrinal or disciplinary matters that all churches are bound in Christian law to accept and abide by its findings.

2. Such a recognized court will not only leave newspapers without excuse for their tyranny of opinion, but would prevent heresy hunting and heated and unfair discussions about supposed unorthodoxy that cause these ugly disturbances. Free and fair discussion is the best antidote for error.

3. If this fails to end such controversies, and the alleged departures from the faith are of a serious nature, such ecclesiastical court as you suggest is the only Christian method of ending the disputation. To this I add that my conviction for many years has been that in such case specific charges should be filed with the church of which the accused is a member. When this is done, then and not till then the church must take notice of the case.

The official board should take steps to bring the matter to a hearing, either by themselves subject to appeal, or by a court convened by them, composed of the representatives chosen by other churches to hear and make final report and disposition of the case. All will be bound in good fellowship to keep such decision.

If this were understood there would be less contention and more care in statements of differences. Fraternally.

W. L. Hayden.

CLORE.

John Harvey Clore was born February 28, 1837, in Lovington, Moultrie county, Illinois; died November 23, 1908, at Umatilla, Florida. He is survived by a wife, seven children and a brother and sister. He was the son of one of Illinois' pioneer settlers, Col. Allen Clore, and became a member of the Christian Church when quite young, later serving as elder and trustee in the church at Lovington. He was married July 8, 1860, to Margaret Ann Creager. He enlisted in July, 1861, in Company A, 12th Illinois Infantry, being mustered out in July, 1865. His going home was sudden; death gave no warning. How blessed the thought of his trust in God! The funeral service was conducted by Rev. W. B. Cooper, and his body laid to rest in a beautiful spot where the orange bloom sheds its fragrance and the mocking bird sings its melodies. A host of friends placed their flowers on his tomb and shed their tears on his grave. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. Yea, saith the spirit, they do rest from their labors and their works do follow them." C.

JOHNSON.

W. F. Johnson was born in Overton county, Tennessee, March 10, 1830, and died at Fort Beton, Mont., September 30, 1908, at the age of 78 years, 6 months and 20 days. His disease was cancer of the stomach. He leaves three sons, four daughters and his wife, besides 63 grandchildren and twelve great-grandchildren, to mourn his departure. He was baptized into Christ in 1866, and was a strong supporter of the Christian faith. He was ready and wanted to go and be at rest, and we hope to meet him in the heavenly home.

NEWCOMER.

Susannah Ellenburger was born in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, May 19, 1844, and made that place her home until 1866, when she moved to Abingdon, Ill. The following year she was united in marriage to William H. Newcomer. They lived for a few years at Chatsworth, Ill., but later removed to Toulon, which continued to be her home until after the death of her husband in 1892. To this union were born five children—Judson E., George W., who died in infancy; Eva N. Snare, all of Modesto, Cal.; John R. and Bert G., all of Florissant, Colo. Early in life she accepted Christ and continued an active, consistent member of the Christian Church until her death, which followed a brief illness of pneumonia, at Colorado Springs, October 31, 1908. The services were conducted by Mr. Bower, minister of the Colorado City Christian Church, and the body was laid to rest in the beautiful little cemetery near Florissant to await the resurrection morning. "Blessed are they who die in the Lord."—J. P. Snare.

ROGERS.

Mary Elizabeth Garth was born in Todd county, Kentucky, October 31, 1837, and died November 5, 1908, at Cameron, Mo. She was married to Elder W. C. Rogers January 5, 1858, at her father's residence in Kentucky. To this union were born seven children—four sons and three daughters. Six of these survive her. Sister Rogers had been a member of the church over fifty years, and was strong in the faith. I was called upon to speak words of comfort to the bereaved. May the promises of God which she has preached to others so often support and comfort her aged husband, now in his eighty-second or eighty-third year, and the children.—J. W. Perkins.

WINFREY.

Lulu Winfrey died at her home near Buckner, Mo., October 23, in the fiftieth year of her age. She was a consistent member of the Christian Church for thirty-three years. She was always active in missionary and benevolent work, often overtaxing her strength in the cause of her Saviour and family. The husband, son and daughter, church and school sadly miss this faithful one.—E. H. Embry.

THE NEW TESTAMENT BOOK OF BEGINNINGS

By Dean W. J. Lhamon, A. B., A. M.

420 pages, cloth, price $1.25, prepaid.

Bible-school teachers will need this book, now that we are to study in Acts.

This work contains a highly commendatory introduction by President A. McLean, of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

One reviewer says, "It is written in terse, virile, splendid English." Another says, "every Sunday-school teacher ought to read it. "Every Sunday-school teacher ought to read it. not the work of a partisan, but of a scholar. No one can read the book without having the horizon of his religious conceptions enlarged. The book will live."

J. H. Garrison, the editor of the Christian-Evangelist, who read the book in manuscript and afterward read it through in print, says: "We have read few books with greater zest than that with which we have followed the author through his several meaty and even brilliant chapters."

The Outlook, of New York, published by Lyman Abbott, says: "In our judgment there is great advantage in such a series of essays as this volume, making the reader acquainted with special books in their entirety, and so with the Bible as literature."

The Independent, of New York, says: "An unusually rich series of sermons, expository, descriptive and practical. They come from a scholarly mind."

Christian Greetings.

Christmas is the gladdest time of the year; for heaven bends low to earth and whispers peace and hope. I would wish for all my friends the fullness of the Christmas message. Its song it not of the earth; nor is it but for a day. There is no grief but the Christmas song can cheer. To my friends in the church my strongest Christmas wishes go out. Through devious paths we have come to a clearer love for the incarnated Son of God. Perhaps all can join in "my creed."

MY CREED.

I believe in Jesus The Friend.
I believe in Jesus The Poor.
I believe in Jesus The Strong.
I believe in Jesus The Altogether Good.
I believe in Jesus The Worker.
I believe in Jesus The Warrior.
I believe in Jesus The Believer.
I believe in Jesus The Worshiper.
I believe in Jesus The Sufferer.
I believe in Jesus The Defeated.
I believe in Jesus The Victorious.
I believe in Jesus The Divine.
I believe in Jesus The Eternal.
I believe in Jesus The Redeemer.
I believe in Jesus The Christ.

* *

I believe that he would have me:

To be strong in difficult circumstances;

To arise and press on even when defeated;

To refuse the offer of every evil compromise;

To forgive when not forgiven;

To unfalteringly work and believingly pray;

To undoubtingly trust His Father and mine;

To be good and true to every friend and to every enemy;

To be joyfully glad for life;

To be sustained and comforted in sorrow;

To sanctify the common and glorify every task;

To ceaselessly labor for His Kingdom of brotherly men;

To accept burdens rather than to avoid them;

To live the simple, open life;

To touch, through every experience, the universal;

To hope on and hope ever.

* *

I believe:

God is the unfailing friend.

The Bible is the history of God's reach after man and man's reach after God. It is the picture of the union of both in Christ.

Miracles are God's affirmation of His Transcendence.

Sin is selfishness.

Salvation is freedom from selfishness; is Christlikeness.

The Cross of Calvary is the temporal coming into view of God's heart.

Reconciliation is the Prodigal in the arms of the weeping Father.

Faith is surrender.

Repentance is surrender.

Baptism is surrender.

Sanctification is the fullness of our strength given in Christ's service.

The church is an enlisted army. It is the community of souls at prayer.

Eternal life is the Christ-life wherever found. It is divine. It is endless.

The Kingdom of heaven is the Brotherhood of man under the reign of Christ.

Death is the graduation from tears to joy; from toil to rest; from the little to the incomprehensibly great; from the flesh to the boundlessness of the spiritual.

Judgment is the love of the Father dealing with the erring child.

While the Christmas chimes are sounding I wish you one and all everything your heart can desire; and surely through the snows and the smoke you will hear the heavenly choir sing "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Man."—George A. Campbell, in Austin Christian Messenger.

Wid, "Oh, House, my House! why don't you answer me?"
"Hello!" sez Brer Fox, an' "Hello!" sezee,
An' a hi-ho-hi an' a heyo!
Brer Rabbit, he 'low, "Well, I'll hatter leave,
Yo' voice done change so it makes me grieve,"
An' a hi-ho-hi an' a heyo!
An' den he hid un' de honeysuckle vine,
An' Brer Fox sneaked out, an' went whar he's gwine,
An' a hi-ho-hi an' a heyo!

A Story of Mark Guy Pearse.

An amusing story is told of the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, the well-known Wesleyan minister and author of many books, which reveals the hold he has upon the hearts of the men of his native country. He had walked, one hot summer afternoon, along the Cornish cliffs for several miles, and came at last to a little village where a Methodist tea-meeting happened to be proceeding. Mr. Pearse entered the little chapel and joined in the tea. He was in the most unclerical of costumes, but nevertheless one or two of the "leaders" managed to recognize him. One of them ventured to approach him, and ask him in an anxious whisper, "Be you the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse?"

"Yes," he answered.

"I thought as how you was. Now, do you see, as how we want to raise a little money, and a thought have struck us. No' do 'ee just come out, quite-like, and then we will put 'ee in the vestry, and we will go into the chapel and say: 'The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, author of "Dan'el Quorm," is in the vestry, and can be see'd at threepence each, the proceeds to go for the good of the cause.' "—Exchange.

Can pleasure, then, like riches, be redeemed and made an acceptable offering to the Lord? Is there a heaven for the pleasure-seeker and the pleasure-giver, as well as for the rich? Most certainly. Normal pleasure is the counterpart of healthy function, and blesses the giver no less than the recipient. The practice of any worthy art is ennobling, and gives more pleasure to the artist than to the looker-on. The actor, the singer, the painter, the poet, is not degraded, but uplifted, by the joy he gives, says William DeWitt Hyde.

She Knew Women.

Flossie, who is doing her first year in school, albeit she is a very bright child, came in the other evening and began catechising her mother. "Mamma," she inquired, "is there any person in history named Timon Tide?" "I've heard of such a name as Timon," ventured the mother, doubtfully." "Was Timon a man or a woman?" "A man, if I remember correctly." "I guess that's the same one then." By this time the mother was quite curious. "Why do you think so, when you know so little about it?" she queried. "Well," responded Flossie with confidence, "the teacher said Timon Tyde waits for no man, and I didn't think it could be a woman."

Talking With God.

"Early learn to pray more for other people than for yourself; there are more of them."

"Pray in the language of the universe, not of your own personality merely, nor of your family or clan or race. God is concerned for all mankind; rise to his altitude."

"Get into the larger currents of life, where God resides. . . . The prayer that has no foreign missions in it is like the sun in eclipse—only a thin rim shows, or a reflected border."

The above stimulating quotations on prayer are from a recent article in the Sunday-School Times. They express the earnest convictions of a veteran pastor.

Bible Answers to "Pretty Girl Questions"

By Edith Darling Garloch

Beauty and Blemishes.—Given a reasonable amount of beauty any woman ought to be happy; if this is not the case, you may be sure it is Madam Beauty's own fault, and since no woman was ever yet able to see her own faults, the wisdom of the Bible, by graphic pictures, presents the true lights and shadows of both beauty and blemish. A careful study of these historic pictures ought to be even more helpful to the dissatisfied beauty than the resort to present day departments which propose to deal with all perplexities and answer all questions of importance to the feminine mind.

Take the first few beauty studies of the Bible. Strange as it may seem, no mention is made of Eve's beauty, which has been made the theme of artist's brush in all ages. The first mention of womanly beauty is in Gen. 6:2, and is broad enough to comprehend us all; for it says: "The sons of God saw that the daughters of men were fair, and desired them for wives." We are willing to have this statement of the case stand at present writing.

Gen. 12:11 tells us that Sarai was fair, the fourteenth verse, that she was very fair. As mother of the great Hebrew race, she was second in honor only to Mary the mother of Christ. We readily recall that the blemish that marred Sarah's beauty was an ambitious jealousy. On the face of it the ambition was a worthy one. It was one with her husband's wish—the desire for a son. There was nevertheless a strong personal element in her ambition; not only was the honor desired but the disgrace that attended a childless wife was to be dreaded. It was a hard matter in those days to be a childless wife. Even though she might retain her husband's affection, there was the derision of other women to put up with and no woman ever did, or will, put up with that sort of humiliation, willingly. Sarai's ambition led her to an act which was in itself a positive demonstration or her lack of faith in God's promise and a total disregard for all that is holy in life, in using Hagar as an instrument for her own interests. The bitter jealousy of the bond woman which she afterward experienced was as unreasonable as it was unfounded. Nine tenths of all jealousy is the same. We see in Gen. 16:6 that Abraham calmly put the matter wholly into her hands when he said, "Behold, thy maid is in thy hands; do to her as it pleaseth thee." The injustice and jealousy of Sarai gives us the pathetic picture of Hagar in the wilderness, and while no jealous beauty who reads this chapter can find therein an exact companion picture in her life to-day, we may forever trace jealousy from an unreasonable source to a maddening result. It is the one blemish that mars my lady's beauty beyond recovery.

Passing to Rebekah, Gen. 24:16, we touch upon one of the most beautiful of Bible women, both in feature and character. There is so much to admire in her. She was industrious. See her sprightly girlish figure at the well as she lets down the water bucket again and again, until she has drawn water enough to slake the camel's thirst. She might have contented herself with giving the rider the drink he craved; but in her perfect health and vigor, she magnified her opportunity to do all she could—a splendid model for a girls' gymnasium! She was genuinely, heartily hospitable (verse 25). "We have both straw and provender enough and room to lodge you in." Join hospitality to beauty and you have a combination no living man can resist. Rebekah was not the sort of a girl to be meekly passed over to a suitor without having a voice in the matter herself; and, though Isaac's servant addressed himself to the proper parties when he made suit for Rebekah's hand for his young master, the decision was referred to Rebekah herself (verses 57, 58). "And they called Rebekah and said to her, Wilt thou go with this man? And she said, I will go." The result of that wedding was a long life of love and felicity that are the ideal of every devout Jewish home to-day. We are loth to darken the picture, and will soften the shadows as much as we may. In Isaac's old age her overwhelming partiality for her younger son, Jacob, led her to an act of deceit which seems beyond our belief. How could a mother show such an injustice to one son and such partiality to the other? How account for the difference toward the two boys? Let us right here explain matters a little for Rebekah. She needs to be helped out at this point. Esau was the elder son, and married. The patriarchal home, no matter how it enlarged and expanded, acknowledged but one head—the patriarch. His wife was queen consort over the household during his life; at his death, her authority passed to her son's wife, and she became dowager with less than dowager's rank.

Esau married two Canaanitish women, daughters of Heth. All of domestic trouble that was possible came from these marriages. We learn all about it in two brief references; for, of all books, the Bibl puts a whole situation, or scene, or story into the fewest words. "These women were a grief to Isaac and Rebekah" (Gen. 26:35). Hard enough for Isaac, but what of Rebekah, who had to be indoors with them! We already know Rebekah had a mind of her own. It was like her to resolve that she would personally see to it that Jacob made no matrimonial error. He should marry one of her own kindred, if you please. Then she goes to Isaac with the plaintive appeal that has since become time-honored whenever wives find things becoming too hard for them: "I am weary of my life because of these daughters of Heth" (Gen. 27:46). Now you see why Rebekah wanted the blessing for Jacob instead of Esau. Isaac was on his death bed. The household was soon to pass under another administration. Those hated daughters of Heth were soon to occupy her place. Almost an adequate apology for Rebekah's next act; if it had been less than one of the most clever pieces of deception ever conceived and carried out. She dressed Jacob in hairy covering that would simulate Esau's hands. She cooked savoury meat, according to the recipe of Esau, the hunter. Blind old Isaac was fooled into blessing the younger instead of the elder son. We can not think that Rebekah carried out this masterpiece of deception the first time she ever dabbled in the art. One does not accomplish so much along such dangerous lines upon the first venture. Deceit is not an act so much as an attribute. Thus we say, nine times out of ten, "That is a deceitful person," rather than, "It was a deceitful act."

Harder to overlook than any other blemish that can come between two fond hearts is deception. O to be open and aboveboard in little things, to avoid little misrepresentations! They are all a part of the same thing that spoils Rebekah for us. Not an instance, but a disposition. One has little joy in beauty that can not be trusted.

The next type of beauty with which we have to do is brought into clear relief by contrast. A beautiful girl with an unattractive sister. Every woman understands the value of contrast and the feeling she entertains towards a plain woman is never that of compassion. She prides herself upon her own beauty, as if it were something she had attained, rather than something received and looks down upon the plain woman for what is certainly not her fault. Gen. 29:17 describes the two sisters. "Leah was tender-eyed, but Rachel was beautiful and well-favored." All of the blessing of being a beloved wife came to Rachel, and Leah had but one comfort; naturally Rachel envied Leah the only happiness which she had. She had all of Jacob's love and she envied Leah her children. Why do we consider envy to be a lesser sin? We have scarcely a compunction in saying, "I envy such a one," yet one of the commandments of the first written law, carved by God's own hand on the table of stone, is "Thou shalt not covet." Envy is nothing less than a species of fault-finding with our own lot, and fault-finding and murmuring brought punishment upon the Hebrew nation again and again. It was a direct feeder of idolatry. Rachel ough to have been happy, for she had all of Jacob's love. Many little instances make

The Old Year's Blessing.

I am fading from you, but one draweth near,
Called the Angel Guardian of the coming year.

If my gifts and graces coldly you forget,
Let the New Year's Angel bless and crown them yet.

For we work together; he and I are one;
Let him end and perfect all I leave undone.

I brought Good Desires, though as yet but seeds;
Let the New Year make them blossom into deeds.

I brought joy to brighten many happy days;
Let the New Year's Angel turn it into praise.

If I gave you Sickness, if I brought you Care,
Let him make one Patience, and the other Prayer.

Where I brought you Sorrow, through his care at length
It may rise triumphant into future Strength.

If I brought you Plenty, all wealth's bounteous charms,
Shall not the new Angel turn them into Alms?

I gave health and leisure, skill to dream and plan;
Let him make them nobler—work for God and man.

If I broke your Idols, showed you they were dust,
Let him turn the Knowledge into heavenly Trust.

If I brought Temptation, let Sin die away
Into boundless Pity for all hearts that stray.

If your list of Errors dark and long appears,
Let this new-born monarch melt them into Tears.

May you hold this Angel dearer than the last—
So I bless his Future, while he crowns my Past.

that plain. Perhaps nothing makes it clearer than the hour of the greatest terror of Jacob's life. He had served his partnership with Laban and was journeying with his wives, his herdsmen and his flocks, when he learned that Esau, the brother whom he had so wronged, was coming to meet him with four hundred armed men. Visions of well-earned retribution to be visited upon him gave Jacob the greatest scare he had ever known. Hurriedly he divides his family and his flocks. In the first band he put the bond-women and their children. Then Leah and her sons, and last of all, or, as the exact wording patly puts it, "hintermost," he follows with Rachel. If Esau means to wreak vengeance, it will fall upon others before it reaches her. She must be safest in the hour of calamity. So tenderly cared for!—and yet Rachel allowed her envy of the one blessing that was another woman's to so dominate her that it led her into idolatry. It is easy to see why she stole her father's household gods. They were supposed to order the fate of the wife and the unborn. We can fancy Rachel beseeching God to give her a son, and then, to make sure of the matter, bringing her sacrifices to these idols and offering the selfsame prayers. Idolatry spread from Rachel's tent throughout Jacob's entire household, so much so that God sent him back to Bethel, the place of his conversion and his first vow, commanding him to purify himself and all his house, and put away the strange gods from their midst. Rachel no doubt brought out the gods she had so cleverly hid, and had a part in the purifying process. It was well that it was thus; for very soon afterwards a young and beautiful wife was to give up her life at the birth of Benjamin. There is no sadder death scene in all literature than the death of Rachel. To get the full setting we go back a few verses and note the record of the death of Deborah, the old family nurse. Only a woman can realize what it meant to Rachel at this time, so soon before Benjamin's birth. When it comes to the death scene, a midwife is mentioned, but Deborah, who was worthy of special mention in the record, was sleeping under the oak at Bethel, and her resting-place was called Allon-bacuthe. (Gen. 35:8.) New and unaccustomed hands waited upon Rachel in the hour of her need. Read of the young wife's death agony and the simple ending, given in parenthesis, "(for she died)." This closes the life of one of the best loved of women while the record goes on with the great love Jacob bore her sons for her sake.

Just one more type of Bible beauty, with its blemish. The time precedes Rachel's death and the going back to Bethel. Jacob is told to go back to his own country, but he is tempted by the delights of the wicked city of Shechem, and he buys a parcel of land and locates there, right in sight of the heathen city, with all its glitter and oriental splendor. What an attraction for Dinah! Only sister with a clan of fond brothers. Leah's beautiful daughter, the only girl of Jacob's home! Dinah looked with longing eyes upon the sights of that city. They were irresistible to the unsophisticated country girl, raised on Laban's stock farm. "Dinah went out to see the daughters of the land" (Gen. 34:1). Of course she did. Nothing could have been more in the usual order of things. Read of the extravagant love of the young prince of the land for the simple Hebrew girl. Read, sorrowingly, of the downfall of the well loved sister and the terrible vengeance of those brothers, and you will the more readily understand why Jacob was ordered to purify his house and to go back to Bethel and begin all over again; or, as Dr. Torrey puts it, to "Get right with God."

Joe's Tiger

By A. M. St. Cyr

Poor Joe sat silent, discouraged, helpless, listening to the clang and roar around the bend of the little logging road that wound down the ravine to the big mill miles away.

The different sounds as they floated around the curve to Joe were blended into one continuous roar, as of something far away, but Joe was so familiar with every bar of the great chorus that he could pick out the individual notes of the forest concert.

But he had not, could never have, any part nor lot in what he heard; could not even be a welcome listener.

"There," he muttered; "the McGiffert is bringing in two good ones; she puffs slow and hard. Now the boys will fly back with the tail cables. Hear the chute creak! I wish I were dead, if it weren't for mother!"

Joe was a good, healthy American boy, with all a Yankee's desire to be a part of what was going on around him. His father, a vivacious and expert lumberman from the pines of Maine, had drifted from the "White Plague" farther and farther south, until he crossed the Rio Grande and invested his all with a company of his own countrymen that had secured a large concession of pine lands from the Mexican government. He was to be general superintendent of all the logging operations, and with that in mind built a neat cottage high up on a beautiful but lonely mountain stream. It was to be his duty to get logs from the tree to the road, where other hands would receive and carry them to the mill, sixteen miles below.

But as if in mockery of his ardent hopes, the insidious disease claimed him when his preparations were all complete and plans laid ten years ahead. Joe's mother was a resolute American woman, who met danger with true courage, and grief with all the natural fortitude of her sex.

The royalty on her husband's share of the timber was ample for her modest wants during life. But Joe, with his double inheritance of thrift and grit, wanted to do something "his own self."

Often boyish complaints would rise to his lips, but somehow he could not voice them to his mother, and she, wise in her generation, saw but never mentioned the grief that rankled in her boy's heart.

A condition of the concessions agreed upon with Mr. Carson was that the common labor should be given to Mexicans only, and Mr. Mars, in charge of the work, followed these terms to the letter. This left Joe almost nothing to hope for, while the work he longed to do was exactly the sort that appealed to an active, healthy-minded boy. There were twenty ponies to haul out the "tail cables." The monster McGiffert loaders would wind up twelve hundred feet of cable, with a log hooked to the end, there would be a sharp click as the hooks were disconnected, the skid man waved the "away" signal, and at full gallop, like the charge of a cavalry company, the boys on their ponies strung out the lines to another log.

As the ponies turned the hook was disconnected, there was a slight detour to avoid the taut cable that sang under the strain, and a race back to the skidway, for it was "first in, first out." The logs passed over the skidway, were scaled, marked and rolled into the chute where, with terrific roar, they shot down to the railway over a mile below.

Joe shut his knife with a snap, threw away the stick he had been whittling, and with a look of determination in his eye marched over to where Mr. Mars was at his lunch. He knew that under the harsh exterior of the superintendent, a harshness necessary to "move things in the woods," rested a kind heart, and that after lunch, when his pipe was filled "just so" he was very approachable.

"Mr. Mars," said Joe, "I want to work, but I can not do anything but what the Mexican boys can do just as well. Will it always be that way?"

"Yes, boy, as long as you can not do anything but ride, the others will be in your way. It is not only in Mexico that this principle holds good, but in all the world. You must learn to do what they can not, or do better what they can do. Then you will find plenty of room.

"Did you ever see a horse race? Did you ever notice that the horse that is ahead has plenty of room? The tail-enders are the ones that are crowded. There are forty-seven boys on this hill, and I can use but twenty-two. I have to settle a dozen quarrels a day as to who shall ride and who shall carry water, but I can not find one that I can trust to 'rough scale' logs. We had a mistake of 8,000 feet yesterday."

Joe could turn his head and hide the tears in his eyes, but he could hardly conceal the tears in his voice as, aghast at his own audacity, he asked:

"Mr. Mars, could I ever—do you think—could I ever learn to scale?"

"My boy," said Mr. Mars softly, but with great emphasis, "you can learn to do anything you set your heart on and put your head to. Now, I believe in learning to do by doing. Take that scale stick. Now lay it across that sixteen-foot log at the small end, the shortest way from bark to bark, and tell me what you find."

"Why, Mr. Mars," said Joe, "this log is twenty-four inches across."

"No, no, my boy; we don't care for the diameter. How many feet does it show in the sixteen-foot column?''

Joe answered promptly, ''three hundred.''

They tried many more, until at last Mr. Mars said: ''I guess you can make it. Take that stick home with you, study it hard and come to chute No. 3 in the morning. Don't think you have an easy job, for there are none in this business. I can not find one myself.''

To tell how Joe went home trying to carry the scale stick, his badge of superiority, carelessly; how his cap would not sit squarely on his head when he passed a group of Mexican boys; how he burst in upon his astonished mother, hugging and kissing her again and again, thanking her for having forced his unwilling feet over the rugged path of the pages he hated, the arithmetic, all this has little to do with our story.

Joe was at Chute No. 3 the next morning a little too early, you may believe, rather than a moment too late. He brought to the work two things that have commanded success in all ages and at all times, and that will always do so: The determination to do his share well and a clear eye for little things. As Mr. Mars had told him, it was no play. In addition to the McGiffert loader, many Mexicans owning teams hauled logs by the thousand. These would come in irregularly and Joe would get behind with the scaling. Then would come intervals of idleness, when no logs at all came in. As he was a boy that thought much, although quiet, he asked permission to go into the woods during these idle hours and scale logs there; then, as they passed over the skidway, he need only check them off.

One morning, when he was out in the clearing, he noticed a commotion among the Mexicans. It seemed to Joe like the rout of an army. Riders were lashing their ponies to utmost speed; timber cutters left their work and all were fleeing in terror to the chute for refuge. He knew enough of the ''Greaser lingo'' to understand that ''Satan's own tiger'' was the cause of the stampede, but his inherent good sense admonished him not to run until he saw something to run from. He stepped to a near-by stump and mounted it, to see if possible the cause of the fright of the Mexican boys, but the animal bounding away looked to him to be only a big, tawny cat, carrying something white. He had often seen his mother's cat carry a mouse the same way.

Joe could not help feeling a sort of contempt for an animal that ran when not pursued; neither could he understand the terror of the Mexican, nor why it took Mr. Mars, who spoke the language like a native, half an hour to induce them to return to their work. So, as they were eating lunch, he asked Mr. Mars about the ''big cat.''

''Well, Joe,'' said the big foreman, ''that animal has more names than a professional 'crook.' He is called Mexican tiger, Mexican lion, mountain lion and catamount. Like all of his tribe, he gets his living by lying hid and springing out on passing animals as a cat catches mice or birds. He is sly and cowardly, and not often seen by day.

''The noise of the mill has frightened away many of the wild animals, but this one, driven by hunger, grew bold enough to come down that cliff beyond the clearing and carry away the leg of a goat that some of the men brought for dinner. I don't know why, but the Greasers are mortally afraid of him. They get too scared at the sight of any wild animal to hit a barn door with their old blunderbuss guns, but this fellow in particular has somehow given them a notion that he is protected by Satan. In fact, in their lingo they call him 'Satan's own tiger.'

''While generally so sly and cowardly, these beasts are as bold as a lion and as vindictive as a grizzly bear if their mates or young are molested. In that case the catamount knows no fear, and will follow you for miles to get revenge. You must kill him or he will kill you.''

In spite of Mr. Mars' warning, Joe's contempt for the animal he had seen only in rapid retreat grew, until he actually began to have dreams of killing a lion. While caring little for the opinion of the Mexicans, their admiration and voluble compliments to his courage in not running really turned Joe's head, and he made up his mind to try conclusions with the mountain lion.

Among his most cherished possessions, or what were to eventually become his, was a fine number ten gun that had been his father's. Joe had often trudged along when his father took short hunting trips, and had in this way learned the habits and how to strip the pelts from animals, and had almost come to regard himself as destined to become a great hunter. His mother, while she had never formally given him the gun as his very own, had sometimes allowed him to try his hand at shooting rabbits and other small game near the house. And now, as Joe thought more and more of his desired triumph as a tiger hunter, he felt a strange uneasiness. Not being a ''perfect'' boy, Joe had on occasion ''fibbed'' to the gentle little mother as to the extent of his rambles when he had gone beyond the prescribed limits; now he was already lying to his conscience and contemplating lying to his mother. Between the present and the time when he should display with pride the tiger skin as a trophy lay a desert of deceit that he dreaded to cross.

On one of the many Mexican holidays, when the desert was deserted except by Skayou, the chute man, Joe walked into the house, and with an air of unconcern very hard to assume, said:

''Mother, I think I will try to kill a few quail.''

''Very well, dear,'' she said in a cheerful tone that gave him a pang he never forgot; ''don't go too far.''

He tried to say, ''All right, mother,'' but somehow the words would not come. He felt like a ''thief in the night'' as he hastily picked up the gun and left the house. Looking over the supply of cartridges he had brought, he was rather surprised to find but one of buckshot. However, he did not dare to go back, as he knew his mother would ask questions and his heart would fail him.

The hill that was so noisy on work days seemed strangely lonely to-day, and Joe was really homesick before he reached the cliff where the great cat lived. A ledge of rock thirty feet high, like one step of a giant's stairs, wound around the base of the hill. Joe sat down on a rock at its foot, feeling a contempt for his surroundings and a greater for himself. He was here at the end of the quest, which had been a complete failure, with nothing but an uneasy conscience as his sole companion.

A soft ''pad, pad'' sounded above him, and Joe looked up. A pair of great yellow eyes in a big round head stared curiously at him, but with indifference in their gaze, for the great cat had not yet learned to fear man. Joe had barely time for one look when the great head was withdrawn, but the instinct of the hunter told him it would appear again.

With his finger on the trigger he pointed the gun at the spot where the head had disappeared. No time for the ''trimbles'' now, for the big, round head appeared again and Joe fired. He said afterwards that if he had taken thought he would surely have died of fright at what happened. A huge form shot out from the ledge, flew over his head like an arrow from a bow, and fell, with a sickening thud, among the leaves twenty feet below.

Joe hastened down to where the dying cat lay. In his own eyes he instantly became a hero, and life was hardly out of the body before he was flaying it in nervous haste, eager to get home with his trophy. The loose hide was soon stripped off. Joe threw it over his shoulder and started for home in triumph. He was but half way across the clearing when he heard a low moan from the mountain swelling quickly into a deep roar of grief and rage that made his blood run cold. Now he recalled with terrible distinctness Mr. Mars' words about what the mountain lion would do when either his mate or his young were disturbed. ''You will have to kill him or he will kill you,'' and poor Joe knew it would be a race for life. His one load of buckshot was gone, and he felt that the small shot would be useless. He could only make the best speed possible, and wonder how much faster the ''tiger'' could run.

Instinctively Joe directed his steps toward the chute. He could not tell why, but it seemed somehow a point of refuge. Old Skayou was there and saw Joe running as if Satan himself was after him. The old chute man, guessing the cause and deficient in courage, hid behind a pile of logs. Joe had little time to make plans. He had seen thousands of logs go down the chute with

It gives a clear understanding of the Bible as a unit, its plan, purpose and power; it brings out the strong evidence of prophecy; points out the inspired way of salvation; convicts of sin and of the absolute dependence on Christ; gives the true platform and method of Christian union; demonstrates the impregnable strength of our position and maps out the certain destiny of every hearer.
THE BEGINNER
ought to have this Institute for the abundance of deep truths by which we have won our victories, for the five books which lead to profitable and pleasant Bible study, for a graded road to the ministry. He can soon learn to preach, then support himself in school.

A minister wrote: "Your ideas are grand for the advanced minister—but can the young men understand?" It is the triumph of the teacher to bring the deepest ideas within the grasp of the student. However, when writing for circular, ask for a copy of our "Sublimest Drama of the Ages." If you can appreciate and enjoy the profoundest truths that ever thrilled the angels to wonder and to song, you can safely order the Institute.

the speed of ten thousand feet a minute, and now he wished he could turn himself into a log. He stepped up on the chute and looked back. A thousand yards away he saw a tawny form bound over a log, and he knew the time had come for quick action. Doubling the skin under him and slinging the gun around his neck, he started down the chute with one faint hope, perhaps the tiger would think the chute a trap and turn back.

Joe thought he knew something of speed, but this was far beyond his wildest imagination. The air cut his face like needles and roared by his ears like a cataract. He wondered if he could stop. He grabbed at the "guide logs" on each side, but received a jerk that nearly tore his arms from his body. It served to slacken the speed, however, and he found that by making short, quick "grabs" he could slow up at pleasure.

Glancing back he saw, snapping, snarling, growling, the very maddest cat in all Mexico; but above its howl of rage came another sound, and Joe gave up all hope, for it was the roar of a log coming down the chute. Old Skayou came out of his hiding place in time to see the tiger disappear down the chute; it was a good chance to square with his old enemy, and he sent a log after it.

With a "Lord help me!" Joe slackened speed and threw himself over the guard log at a place where the chute was but ten feet above the ground, and struck the spreading limbs of a dwarf cedar that broke the force of the fall.

As he rolled from limb to limb like a wounded bird, Joe heard a scream of terror from his enemy, and at the same instant saw the great cat flying through the air, with legs extended like the arms of a windmill.

Joe struggled to his feet, feeling whipped and ashamed at his conduct, yet with a great thankfullness that he had been spared. He gave but a single glance at the still quivering mass, in which not a single bone remained unbroken, and felt old and sick. How he got home and to bed he never clearly remembered, but he was back at his work the next morning, and ever after shared the Mexican fear of "Satan's own tiger."

When Joe was a head taller than the little mother and general manager of the immense lumber plant; when he half-seriously complained that it was harder for him to keep mother from working too much than to do his own work, the story of the tiger was told for the first time.

Trembling with excitement, the mother listened in wild-eyed wonder, and as Joe finished, she said:

"Joe Carson, I've a great notion to whip you yet."

The Style That Goes.

Clyde Fitch, at a dinner given by a group of illustrators in honor of "Girls," his successful new play, produced one of his famous scrapbooks.

"In this scrapbook," said Mr. Fitch, "I have gathered passages from the year's 'best sellers.' The passages will give you some idea of the style that goes."

Then he read: "The worthy pastor appeared at the manse door, his hands thrust deep in the pockets of his loose jacket, while he turned the leaves of his prayerbook thoughtfully, anod wiped his glasses with a distraught air.'

" 'After the door was closed a stealthy foot slipped into the room, and with cautious hand extinguished the light.'

" 'Fitzgibbon lingered over his final lemonade, when a gentle voice tapped him on the shoulder, and, turning, he beheld his old friend once again.'

" 'The chariot of revolution is rolling onward, gnashing its teeth as it rolls.' "

The Old Year's Farewell.

With a shrill, sharp call rang the telephone,
And Teddy sprang to reply.
"Hello!" said a voice in a trembling tone,
"I've come to say 'Good-bye.'

"I must leave you all at twelve to-night,
I'm the Old Year, I'll explain;
This minute the New Year is on his flight
By the limited fast mail-train.

"I've given to you the best I had,
But the New Year is richer still;
He has stores of brand-new wisdom, my lad,
Your youthful brain to fill.

"He knows whole volumes of secrets rare,
Which he'll gladly tell to you;
He will teach you how to do and dare,
To be brave and loyal and true."

And then the voice grew weak and old;
"Ring off," it gently said;
While the bells of the happy New Year told
That the good Old Year had fled.

JOE.

BY GRACE J. FULLER.

Unmindful of the passers-by, forgetful of his unsold papers, Joe, a ragged newsboy, stands in front of the Boston Store, enjoying by means of his vivid imagination the various articles displayed in the window. The snow falls unheeded on his bare feet, for he imagines them covered with new shoes. A long overcoat trimmed with fur protects his shivering form from the wind. His tingling fingers are warmed with pretty striped mittens. On a new red sled he coasts in the park, or with shining skates glides over the frozen river.

The voice of a fellow newsboy passing the store arouses Joe from his dream, and brushing the snow from his neglected papers, he calls aloud, "Evening Post, Times, Daily Record."

A richly dressed woman who had approached the window at the request of her little son, had observed the newsboy's scanty apparel, his wistful look at the clothes, and his cheerful call. She spoke to the boy, who quickly removed his fragment of a cap, and politely asked, "Paper, lady?"

"The Post, please."

"Thank you, ma'am."

"Now come with me into the store."

"I dasn't go, lady; the manager drove all us newsies out once."

"I'll take you with me. Come."

They entered the store, ablaze with light and gorgeous with Christmas decorations. Joe timidly shrank behind his friend and gazed with wonder upon the beautiful things about him.

After a little while a gentleman to whom the lady had been talking called Joe aside, and soon, as if in a dream of fairyland, the ragged newsboy found himself arrayed in the very garments for which his little heart had been yearning. Thrilled with delight, Joe for a few seconds admired his new possessions, then called for his generous friend. Turning to the lady, his eyes full of gratitude, Joe reverently whispered, "Lady, did God send you?"

He hastened to his garret home to display his treasures. He bounded up the rickety stairs and dashed into the little room that was a home for four, exclaiming, "Mother, mother, look, look!"

I was just lookin' in a big window, wonderin' how it would feel to be dressed all up nice in new things that nobody else had wore, when a beautiful lady come up and asked me to go inside with her. I was afraid to go at first, but she said that it would be all right, an' I forgot all about being afraid after I got in, 'cause it was all so ellergant. Them big archways, you know, is fixed all up with holly and big red bells, fastened with yards and yards of red ribbons, and some places the lights spells "Merry Christmas." The lady just said somethin' to a man, and he took me to a pretty room, where first thing I knowed I was dressed in all these new things. Gee! Ain't they splendid, though!"

"Mother, I just b'lieve now what the teacher told us down at the mission about Christmas and God sendin' his own little boy down to earth for everybody; it must be so, 'cause he sure sent that beautiful lady, but when I asked her she only cried. I'm goin' back to the mission, and Tim can go too, mother; he can wear my new coat, an' I'll wear the overcoat. Say, mother, you hide these mittens away some place, and if Santa Claus forgets to bring Beth any, we'll give her these; she'll think it was Santy, just the same. I don't need 'em now, you know, for I've got two big pockets. Ain't it all lovely?" —The Junior Herald.

Making Postal Cards for the Whole United States

By William S. Birge.

Probably few people are aware when they invest a cent in a United States postal card that they are stimulating the industry of Rumford Falls, Maine, or when they purchase a postage stamp they are booming the industry of a neighboring town, Mechanic Falls, Maine.

The big factory at Rumford Falls has recently been awarded another four-year contract by the United States government. In the last four years the output has been thirty-two hundred million cards. Some two million five hundred thousand pass through Boston every day in registered mail cars. Such cities as Boston and New York consume about two carloads a day.

After the spruce logs from the Maine woods have been chewed and chemically treated, the pulp flows into a big vat called the "digester." Here the pulp looks like a rich churning, but it is in reality the solution from which the cards are made—cards that will carry written messages all over the civilized world.

The wood pulp is run out on a screen of such fine mesh that the paper is long in gathering, and the result of this more than ordinary care is a firm, smooth card of the familiar cream yellow, free from inequalities of texture and from all flakes and shadows when held to the light.

In the big, clean finishing room, where the floor is littered with a clutter of books and newspapers, sit a score of neatly attired women smoothing the great sheets of book and postal stocks into piles. The least defect in the surface is detected at once by their supersensitive finger tips, and sheet after sheet is rejected for a blemish, invisible save to the touch.

Great trucks carry the postal paper to the printing establishment, but before the presses are set to work, each load must be inspected by a government inspector. This inspector first applies the bulk gauge to prove that the postal card is up to the standard in thickness.

The contract requires that each sheet be eleven one-thousandths of an inch in thickness. The second requirement is that every sheet shall endure the test of fifty pounds' pressure to the square inch. So into the strength-tester goes the sheet from the truck load, the pressure is applied and the indicator shows the value of the sheet.

The "blind man's test," or German test, is the third, and it is designed to show whether the surface of the card is properly resined, sized or finished. It is a vigorous application of pen and ink. Should the ink be absorbed, the surface is inferior in its glaze. When the markings are plainly apparent to the touch with "blind eyes," the calendering is satisfactory. Each sheet of stock fed into the printing press is registered automatically, so that an exact tally can be kept of all cards printed. The two presses have a united capacity of three million cards daily.

The girls who gum the packages together have to be very spry. With a dozen gummed strips between their lips, their trained fingers hover over the straight-edged packs of postal cards like hummingbirds, till, with a dash and a flutter, the band is in place

One young woman is behind each machine to box these packets, and others are kept busy folding the pasteboard boxes in which they are packed, five hundred in a box. The pasteboard packages are placed in wooden boxes of different sizes. They hold five thousand, ten thousand and fifty thousand cards.

The postal card craze has no effect in Rumford Falls. There is no busy season in the card mill. The same amount is produced day after day. The government requires that a certain amount be on hand at the factory. These are kept in a fire and burglar-proof vault, which has a capacity of one hundred million cards.

But this is not all the money Uncle Sam puts into the coffers of Maine manufacturers. A dozen miles from here, at Mechanic Falls, all the paper for the millions and millions of postage stamps used in the United States every month is manufactured.

Once a month, and sometimes oftener, a requisition is received for one million sheets of paper. Each sheet will make three hundred and sixty-one stamps. The sheets are 18½ by 20¾ inches and of the best quality of paper turned out of the mill. It is made of spruce and soda pulp.

Each sheet is marked with the letters U.S.P.S. (United States Postage Stamps) running lengthwise. The "Dandy Roll," used to make these letters, is the property of the United States government and must be given up at the expiration of the contract. The roll of brass wire is ninety inches long. The marks are made by the heavy raised letters of metal, placed at equal intervals on the surface. The paper is made in rolls weighing two hundred pounds, and the width of seventy-four inches is divided four times into sheets, as specified above. The next step is to mark the sheets so that the workmen in Washington shall have no trouble in keeping them right side up, i. e., with all the letters upright and running in vertical lines from top to bottom.

Then comes the sorting process, for none but the perfect sheets are accepted by Uncle Sam. This work is done by girls, who handle each sheet separately, holding it up and looking through it toward the light, by which means thin places and other defects are quickly discernible. The rejected sheets are thrown upon the floor, and one person is kept busy raking them together and gathering them up to be returned to the pulp room to be reground.

From start to finish the work requires the greatest care and precision, for there must not be a single defect in a single sheet sent to Washington, where the stamping, gumming and perforating are done.
